"I want my arms around them all."

James V. Zizzi describes it as a return to the nesting instinct. It's only natural to rejoice a bit when the last of the kids moves out. Care to dance? I'll get the champagne. But eventually there are grandkids you want to spoil. Or perhaps a rather large and still growing extended family. Many of the clients of James V. Zizzi express a desire for a place for all to gather to celebrate, to laugh, to remember, and come back to ... for generations.

A place with a huge hearth where old memories can be relived, new ones created. A place where meals can be prepared and secret family recipes shared. A place with expansive windows overlooking the children safe at play.

Some builders see empty nesters as a market opportunity. James V. Zizzi sees them as part of his growing family.

The Reason the Campaign Speech Fetched $42,000 at Christie's

By Dan Rattiner

Two pages of a political campaign speech were auctioned off at Christie's last week. They fetched $42,000 on spirited bidding after zooming past the upset price of $6,000.

This is a lot of money for two pages of a 50-page political speech, particularly since it was a speech that never got delivered and the man running failed to get elected. But it was important nevertheless. On October 14, 1912, the handwritten copy of this speech, in the vest pocket of this Presidential candidate, saved his life. The story has particular meaning for Montauk. For that candidate is one of Montauk's favorite sons.

Fourteen years earlier, Teddy Roosevelt became an American hero by leading his Roughriders up San Juan Hill to rout the Spanish in Cuba. This marked our first military victory on the international stage and the arrival of this country as a major world power. With the war over, Roosevelt, the Roughriders and the rest of the American army returned to America by troop ship to a dock in Fort Pond Bay at Montauk, New York. There, for the months of August and September, 1898, these 34,000 troops encamped in the fields between Fort Pond and the Montauk Lighthouse on "maneuvers." Americans in small towns throughout America were ecstatic about our triumphant victory over the Spanish and were eager to welcome home the soldiers with speeches and parades. But many soldiers were sick with tropical diseases. The President of the United States at the time, William McKinley, was advised to bring all the troops home from Cuba first to some remote area where they could either recover or die. Otherwise there might be an epidemic. Then

Taft. Because of Roosevelt's popularity, Taft won in a landslide. But after the election, Roosevelt and Taft had a falling out. Roosevelt didn't like how the fat man was running things.

By 1912, the year of the speech that was never delivered, Roosevelt was back running for President. He could not run as a Democrat, because Taft, the incumbent, was running on that ticket. And he couldn't run as a Republican because on that line was Woodrow Wilson. And so Roosevelt, who had recently come back from a safari in Africa, ran on a third party ticket he called "Bull Moose." It was going to be a close race.

Just three weeks before the election, on the afternoon of October 14, 1912, Roosevelt was scheduled to give a speech in Milwaukee. He had handwritten it, fifty pages long, while on the campaign train that morning, and he had folded it up and put it in the vest pocket of his jacket. As the train came to a halt, he got up and walked out onto the rear platform of the railroad car. In the vest pocket, he also had his steel eyeglass case, containing the spectacles he would need to wear to read his speech. He never got to read it.

As he waved to the assembled crowd and they could go home.

Thus they came to Montauk.

Within two years, Teddy Roosevelt was President of the United States. He served from 1900 until 1908, and is considered among the best presidents this country ever had.

At the end of his second term, he threw his support behind another fellow Democrat, a very overweight man named William Howard

BREAKING NEWS

GAMBLERS WIN

The Supreme Court dealt foes of gambling casinos in New York a crippling blow on Monday. They refused to hear a lawsuit challenging the state's right to award gambling casinos within its boundaries. The decision is a victory for Governor Pataki, who defended that right since the revenues from gambling help pay the bills, and is a major defeat for anti-casino groups. "This is the end of the line," said attorney Cornelius Murray of Albany, who had led the lawsuit up to the Supreme Court on behalf of a coalition of anti-gaming groups. "There's no place left to go."

smiled, a shot rang out, and he felt something hit his chest. But he did not fall down.

In the crowd, a bystander had seen a deranged man named John Schrank take out a pistol and aim it at the President's head from close range. Instinctively, the bystander tried to bat the gun away, hitting the man's arm and ruining his aim just moments before he fired. He then wrestled the man to the ground.

Roosevelt leaned on the railing and felt his jacket. There was blood on his fingers. The bullet, a .38, had glanced off the eyeglass case inside the vest pocket and then traversed through all 100 pages of the folded speech. The speech slowed the bullet to such a degree that when it entered the candidate's chest, it only went in about an inch — never getting beyond the chest wall.

Roosevelt walked off the train, and was taken to a Milwaukee hospital where he was treated with an injection of tetanus vaccine and then sent on to a hospital in Chicago to remain under observation for the next eight days. The bullet was never removed, but it was reliably reported in the papers that all the other people on the ward where Roosevelt was recovering complained bitterly that the candidate snored so loud it shook the room.

The speech saved Roosevelt's life, but, arguably, it lost him the election. In the hospital, he was now completely out of commission for the final run up to election day, and in the voting, he finished a close second, behind Woodrow Wilson, but ahead of his now hated foe, the even more overweight than before William Howard Taft.

The two pages sold at Christie's to an unidentified bidder each contained two bullet holes, as one might expect. Where the other 48 pages are is not known. Perhaps the buyer will donate the document to the Montauk Lighthouse Historical Museum collection.

CATHY LESTER, 60

By Debbie Tuma

Cathy Lester, a former East Hampton Town Supervisor and long-time baywoman, died on November 21 at Southampton Hospital, of an apparent heart attack.

She served as both a councilwoman and as East Hampton Town Supervisor, during the 1990's, and she was active throughout her life fishing the bays with her late husband Tom Lester. During a packed funeral service held at Yardley and Pino in East Hampton last Friday night, she was remembered by many of her

Democrat colleagues from the country and Town.

"Cathy has left her mark on a remarkable 350 year-old community, and she also leaves adversaries who secretly admired her," said New York State Democratic Chairwoman Judith Hope. "Because of her, thousands of acres of waterways and farmlands will be forever preserved."

Many people praised her efforts to protect the East End environment, instituting the 4% sales tax to preserve the land, and also its animals. Councilman Job Potter said, "I served with Cathy on the board, and I saw how she fought against pollution of the bays, and advocated for the plovers. She also sponsored many programs for seniors and for the poor of this town."

Lester was born March 4, 1945 in Southampton to Reuben Shaffer and Helen Dix, and she is predeceased by her husband, bayman Tom Lester. She is survived by her daughter, Della Bennett, of North Sea. She was cremated, and interred in the family lot at Round Swamp Cemetery in East Hampton. Memorial donations can be made to the East Hampton Bayman's Association.

New Zealand Wrestles With Meeting their Kyoto Accord Obligations

By Dan Rattiner

Dan's Papers has maintained a very close relationship with the other side of the world over the years. The reason is that for each of the past 31 years, we have run a contest where we ask readers to cut out a dateline of this newspaper when they go off for the winter on their travels, and then from wherever they go, mail it back to us. The person who sends us a dateline from the farthest away wins a $50 prize. We announce the winner in mid-December.

As a result of this, we have developed correspondence with people in New Zealand, Australia, China, Japan and Thailand. As for the farthest point away from Bridgehampton in the world, if you were to dig a hole straight down from our office, you would come out in the Indian Ocean, with the nearest landfall the small town named Augusta on the west coast of Australia.

We will report on the result of our 2005 contest next week, but this week, we'd like to talk about what's new in New Zealand.

As I am sure you know, the United States is not among the countries that signed the Kyoto Accord on greenhouse gases. There are in the world 192 countries. At Kyoto ten years ago, 156 of them signed this agreement, among them New Zealand. By signing it, New Zealand and all the others pledged to follow the rules of the Kyoto Accord, which means, using an agreed upon schedule, reducing the amount of global warming carbon that they throw up into the atmosphere year by year. New Zealand takes this very seriously.

The initial period for which the reduction in gases is to go into effect is from April 2006 to April 2012. Countries are to reduce their emisthey began to come up with plans to reduce emissions. From these plans would come bills that would be voted on in April of 2005 and they would then be in effect, one year ahead of schedule.

In the autumn of 2004, I received a letter from a correspondent in Auckland, New Zealand, named E. J. Collins. In it was a news clipping. Parliament was considering the fact that a very large emission into the atmosphere from the country was sheep farts. New Zealand has 50 million sheep, ten times the number of people. The total amount of the methane gases emitted by the back end of sheep could not be ignored.

According to the news clipping, the government was considering passing a law making it mandatory for sheep farmers to change the feed they give their sheep. There was a more expensive feed. And it produced fewer sheep farts. Representatives in Parliament, from such cities as Wellington and Christchurch, were making resounding speeches about the benefits of the more expensive feed. Representatives in rural areas were predicting doom for the farmers if this law were passed. The more expensive feed would cause an increase in the price of the wool. New sion levels to what they were in 1990. After 2012 they are to reduce their levels by an even larger amount.

As the government of New Zealand began to approach the looming deadline of April 2006, they took a hard look at what it is that they send into the atmosphere. They began these studies five years ago and one by one, the reports came in. Then, in the autumn of 2004,

Zealand would lose its market share in the world, they said. Economic collapse would follow.

It takes a while for news to get from down under out to the rest of the world. And so it was only in the past month that I learned from some news clippings sent by Mrs. B. Cox in Christchurch to Jenny Schlecht in Cutchogue and then on to me what finally transpired when crunch time came in April of this year in the New Zealand Parliament. Honestly, I am rather disappointed with what they did. But then what do you expect when a bunch of politicians get together? What they did, however, is a lesson for us to consider when, finally, this country gets around to signing on the dotted line to save the planet, which, eventually we will have to do.

In the end, New Zealand did what every government does when confronted with a problem. They placed a tax on it. It is called the Carbon Tax, and it requires that businesses and individuals pay the government $15 for every ton of carbon emissions thrown up into the atmosphere as the result of any commercial sale. The government, going through everything in the country that gets sold, has created complicated formulas based on particular goods and services. The tax will cost homeowners an additional one cent for every kilowatt of electricity they buy. They will pay an additional 46 cents for every 9 kg container of propane gas, 4 cents more for every litre of gasoline and 68 cents more for every 20 kg bag of coal.

They expect that the existence of this tax will cause people to shy away from buying things that have the tax on it in favor of those that don't. For example, electricity that comes from a coal-fired plant is taxed, but electricity that comes from a hydroelectric plant is not. (New Zealand has a ban on all nuclear plants since it made a decision in the late 1980s to be a nuclear free zone.)

The other thing the existence of this tax will do is bring in money. It's expected that $600 million a year will be raised this first year. What they will do with this money is not clear though there is discussion about it. Interestingly, nowhere is there talk that they will use any of it for emission-reducing initiatives. The reason is that big business has let up a howl about how this new tax will affect them. They want rebates.

And they will get them. The government is setting up a board to give out Negotiated Greenhouse Agreements involving rebates or exemptions to those that appear before them and make a good case. They are predicting that $200 million a year will be given out in this manner, essentially just sending the money around and around. As for the remaining $400 million, who knows? Probably much of it will have to be used to pay additional tax collectors, auditors and Greenhouse Agreement Board members.

For a while during the debates, it looked as if the government might put a tax on hydroelectric power. A report circulated in Parliament about a study in Brazil that found methane gases were emitted into the atmosphere from the lakes created behind the hydroelectric plants. These new lakes caused vegetable matter to be rotted on the lake bottoms. When the lake water went through the plant, methane from the decayed vegetable matter was emitted into the atmosphere in amounts greater than if the plants were driven by oil. In the end, however, it was noted that the Brazilian study was done in a rainforest, while the hydroelectric plants in New Zealand were largely in unforested areas. And so they dropped that idea.

As for the sheep, Parliament voted not to require a change in the feed. Sheep are the mainstay of the economy. Let them fart all they want. We'll deal with it later. This part of the new law is known as the Livestock and Agriculture Exemption Clause.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Lasse Hallstrom Directs Richard Gere, Eli Wallach, Marcia Gay Harden

By Dan Rattiner

In 1986, a small Sag Harbor book publisher agreed to produce a book that no major book publisher wanted to produce. It had been written in prison ten years earlier. It was a confessional, really, about the crime the author had committed that resulted in his year and a half incarceration. He had confessed to it in court. Plea bargained. Now he had written it all down. The Sag Harbor publisher, a man named Marty Shepherd, agreed to publish it in a small quantity. The author, a man named Clifford Irving, could sell it privately or in a few select bookstores. Perhaps he could even send it out to reviewers.

Irving sent it out. He even sent it, at Marty's request, to this newspaper. Irving lived in East Hampton and I knew him. But I declined to review it. I had more important things to do.

Next year, thirty years after this book was written and twenty years after its limited publication, it will premiere as a major motion picture. Entitled Hoax, it will star Richard Gere as Clifford Irving, Marcia Gay Harden as his long suffering wife Edith, Alfred Molina as Irving's sidekick and veteran star Eli Wallach as the chief advisor to the richest man in the world at the time, Howard Hughes. The film is directed by Lasse Hallstrom (most recently the director of An Unfinished Life, The Shipping News, Chocolat, and The Cider House Rules.) Some of the other characters in it are Truman Capote, played by Michael J. Burg, Cyd Charisse played by Stacy Lynn Spierer, and a host of other characters who are identified as, among others, a McGraw Hill Security Guard, a bowling alley attendant, a salesman, feral girl #2, Daniels and Topless hippie (played by Olja Hrustic).

The movie, to be distributed by Miramax, was filmed on a tight 41-day schedule this summer in Fajardo, Rio Grande and San Juan, Puerto Rico, Manhattan and White Plains. One interesting scene was filmed at the Central

WHAT PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH ACTUALLY SAID

By Dan Rattiner

At the present time, George W. Bush is making speeches claiming his critics are "revising" history about the war in Iraq.

"Everyone has a right to disagree with the decisions I made," he said. "But no one has the right to revise what was said at the time."

Democrats have accused him of lying to the American people before the war to get them to vote for the war. He is being accused of unequivocally stating that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction. He says he never said that. And the Democrats are revising history to make it appear that he did.

Here are some of the exact words said by the President prior to the war. Also, this commentator's exact words in this newspaper at the time.

"We know with absolute certainty that Saddam Hussein has Weapons of Mass Destruction. Nuclear bombs. Chemical weapons. And biological weapons." — George W. Bush, October 13, 2002.

"We've learned that Iraq has trained al Qaeda members in bomb-making and poisons and deadly gases." — George W. Bush, December 7, 2002.

"George Bush threatened to rain hydrogen bombs down on the heads of the Iraqis the other day. He said if they attack us with biological or chemical weapons, he would launch a full-scale nuclear assault. Those were his words." — Dan Rattiner, December 20, 2002

What got author Clifford Irving in jail occurred in 1971. At the time, he was living in East Hampton, making his living as a writer, authoring books of fiction and nonfiction. Among his successes was a biography of a well-known art forger named Elmyr de Hory.

In 1971, billionaire Howard Hughes was running his empire from a penthouse suite in Las Vegas, where he had lived for twenty years guarded by a small army of Mormon security people. He never left the suite, and he never met anyone face to face. It was widely reported that he wore a bathrobe all day, or nothing at all. And that he had a full white beard that came down to his waist and that he had let his fingernails grow out six inches or more. But nobody really knew the truth.

Clifford Irving decided to write the autobiography of Howard Hughes. He would go to a publisher and say he had Hughes' blessing and had met him and discussed his life many times. He would present handwritten notes from Hughes, written to him about various events in his life. He would do all this without ever having met the man. And he would make a bundle. Irving went to McGraw Hill in Manhattan and sold the project for $500,000, one hundred for him, and four hundred for Hughes, which Irving promised he would personally deliver to the billionaire. McGraw Hill read the outline, read Hughes' notes — they even had a handwriting expert look at it — who declared it authentic and wrote Irving a check. (Samples of Hughes' handwriting had appeared in Time Magazine. Irving learned to copy it.) Irving then settled down to write.

The book never came out. The public was so eager to see it and the publisher was so eager to promote it that excerpts of certain chapters appeared in LIFE Magazine prior to publication. And Howard Hughes read them. He exploded. Although he still would not appear in public, Hughes arranged for a press conference by telephone from his apartment, at which time, with almost the entire world listening in, he denounced Clifford Irving and declared that The Authorized Biography of Howard Hughes was a hoax. He'd never met the man.

"I only wish I were still in the movie business," Hughes said wistfully, referring to his years as a filmmaker in the 1930s, "because I don't remember any script I ever saw in Hollywood as wild or imagination-stretching as this autobiography yarn has turned out to be."

Irving and his wife were arrested — he for defrauding McGraw Hill and she for physically putting the cash into a Swiss bank account — and all the copies of the Hughes autobiography had to be destroyed. (Although publication in book form was forever forbidden, the Autobiography of Howard Hughes was placed on the Internet, briefly, in 1999.) In the end, Edith received a jail sentence that was suspended and Clifford served a year and a half in prison for his crime. And in prison, Irving wrote the story about the story, which he called The Hoax. The Hoax is what is being made into the film today.

Although no part of this film was made in the Hamptons, much of it took place here. Irving wrote "The Autobiography of Howard Hughes" here, and after he was arraigned, he hired a local attorney, William Maloney, to represent him. Also, with McGraw Hill pressing their case, IRS agents raided an art gallery opening on Jobs Lane in Southampton for painter Edith Irving, who was selling her work in the hopes of making enough money to provide restitution.

And there are numerous other Hamptons connections. This is a New York media story after all. Eli Wallach, with his wife Anne Jackson, lives here. Truman Capote lived here. Marcia Gay Harden won a Best Supporting Actress Academy Award for her performance as Jackson Pollock's wife in POLLOCK which was filmed here.

As for Clifford Irving, he returned to East Hampton after his stint in jail, and after that lived for a while in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico. He was divorced from Edith, and she moved to Ibiza, Spain. Today, Irving is living in Aspen, Colorado and is still writing away. (His most recent books are Final Argument and The Spring.) He's been paid for the rights to his life story and the rights to Hoax and he doesn't have a problem with that.

"I made 21 cents an hour while I was in prison," he said. "It balances out."

'It's a Big Big World,' Made in East Hampton, Premieres on PBS

By Julia Nasser

Along with most of our nation's viewing public under the age of seven, I tuned in to Channel 13 this weekend for a sneak preview of the upcoming PBS program "It's A Big Big World," which will begin airing in January. The series uses Shadowmation, an innovative process that combines ancient puppetry with cutting edge computer graphics. The effect is a visually startling scene set in a 3D world of gargantuan trees and crystalline water, gnarling roots and infinite skies. Here is where Snook, a gigantic, peace-promoting sloth, lives with his friends in the World Tree (largest tree on earth). It's like nothing else you've seen on television. Imagine Dark Crystal meets Toy Story, set in a lush jungle to Afro-Latin percussion.

While set in a South American rainforest, the series is actually produced locally, in East Hampton at Wainscott Studios. You might recognize its name due to the ongoing WGA strike which has attracted, along with a lot of negative attention to the project, the infamous inflatable, buck-toothed and red-eyed labor-union rat that stood outside the gates last August. Despite all the press, little has been said about the program itself, or what goes on across the picket line, in that enormous and mysterious building without windows on Industrial Road.

Wainscott Studios is a 10,000 square foot, hangar-like space set back from the road. To get there one passes an evangelical church housed in a retired factory building with Jesus signs plastered to its façade. Down the street is a rehab clinic and nearby is The East Hampton Airport. The back road is an unlikely location for a PBS and Sony sponsored project of this

Water Mill resident, expected when he transformed the out-of-the-way building into a professional blue screen stage, with puppet shop, editing studio, endless rooms of gear and gadgets, sound studios and office space.

After being heckled by picketers and taking two wrong turns, I finally arrived at the studio last week for a look. Before me was a huge stage painted electric blue from cement floor to 56-foot ceiling. On it stood the sloth, and next to him were Wartz and Madge, a singing tree-frog and an ancient she-turtle with an unforgettably kind and wrinkled face and a map of the world on her shell. Behind the puppets, almost a dozen people clad in fluorescent-blue, skin-tight unitards were chatting casually. Soon, the break ended and cameras began moving along tracks. Behind the sloth, three people gathered, then began moving, as one body, in perfect harmony magnitude.

The roar of jet engines that usually infuriates residents now competes with the group of picketers moaning through megaphones just outside the studio, not to mention the bagpipe music blasted through mega-speakers in retaliation and the occasional honks from passing cars. This commotion is not what Mitchell Kriegman, creator of "It's a Big Big World" and around the stage.

These puppeteers are highly respected professionals trained in ban raku, an ancient Japanese form of puppetry. Watching a small screen from inside the suit, one person controls its head and right arm, another is responsible for the left arm while a third controls the feet. They travel as a strange and graceful six-legged beast and are even taught Tai-chi to foster fluidity of movement. Their ludicrous blue ninja suits match the giant screen behind. This allows these discrete figures to be edited out of the shots. Then the puppets are placed before a computer generated background, edited in studio, and sent to a lab in Canada for processing.

This method, called Shadowmation, is the brainchild of Mitchell Kriegman. Live action flexible animatronics characters are placed in real time, high definition virtual environments. Every image is pristine, colors are dazzling, graphics are immaculate and the puppets are warm and life-like, far from the wooden, knock-kneed Pinochios of the past. Even the wobbly, felt puppets from "Sesame Street" seem inanimate by comparison. These can raise an eyebrow, depict any emotion with the slightest gesture of paw, furrow a brow, wink or smirk. The mystic monkey does Tai Chi; the anteater can moon walk and they all sing, play instruments and dance like little John Travoltas.

Snook, our leader, is soft with round, shiny eyes and a voice like a kindergarten teacher from Mendocino County. He is surrounded by a cast of eccentric companions in The World Tree, including Bob, the hypersensitive and perpetually overwhelmed anteater, an ancient turtle named Madge and Oko, a mystic monkey-guru. There is also a neurotic, braggart fish named Ick, a know-it-all bird named Burdette and a pair of rambunctious marmoset siblings who go by Smooch and Winslow. Kriegman, besides patenting Shadowmation, is a former writer of "Saturday Night Live," and executive head writer of "Ren and Stimpy," "Rugrats" and "Doug." He created "Clarissa Explains it All," along with "Bear in the Big Blue House," "Elmo in Grouchland" and "Book of Pooh," and has received numerous Emmys and Parent's Choice awards, solidifying his legendary status in the world of kids' programming.

He began developing the concept for "It's a Big Big World" after 9/11, setting out to create a show that would help kids "understand and feel good about the world." It uses geography and geo-science to develop a sense of safety, understanding and tolerance, exploring tricky subjects and making them approachable. His investigative and scientific approach to the puzzling world, while informative, never fails to be playful. Gravity and balance, for example, are taught through jungle seesaw- scenes. In one episode, Bob the anteater dresses up as an ant, picks up a magnifying glass and follows the marching ants in hopes of understanding them.

The average TV set is on more than seven hours a day, and children watch an average of 20-24 hours of TV a week. That's an entire day's worth. It can pollute and debase, desensitize kids to the consequences of violence but it can also educate, illuminate, and entertain. It was Big Bird that taught me how to count; Mr. Rogers to share. Without being moralistic in tone, "It's a Big Big World" promotes open-mindedness and acceptance, non-violence and compassion. Interspersed are animal kingdom factoids and age appropriate science. Did you know that ants only sleep for a few minutes at a time?

The energy inside Kriegman's studios is

Doctors Seek Donations to Make Our Hospital the Best It Can Be

By David Stoll

Given the extraordinary wealth in the Hamptons, people might assume that our health-care delivery system rivals that of the wealthy Manhattan neighborhoods. After all, one can have a heart attack just as easily when sitting on his porch overlooking Mecox Bay as when sitting in his living room overlooking the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Yet, for a variety of reasons, our only hospital faces numerous challenges, and it is often difficult to attract doctors and nurses to the East End. Many people are addressing these issues from a variety of fronts. Among them are Dr. Peter Michalos, who has made public his 18-month effort to raise funds for medical goods and services that are lacking on the East End. He has announced a goal of raising $40,000,000.

Dr. Michalos, an ophthalmologist who performs surgery at Southampton Hospital and also lives in Southampton, has been cited in New York Magazine's annual top doctors issue. In addition to his Southampton practice, he teaches at the Columbia Medical Center. With such credentials and time demands, why would he take on fund raising? He feels strongly that Southampton Hospital should rival any in Manhattan, and that wealthy Hamptons homeowners should share this desire. But today, Southampton Hospital has a debt load of $40 million (allegedly the result of mismanagement by one of the hospital's prior CEOs, John F. Ferry, Jr.). Because the interest on this debt results in the hospital losing money each year, buying needed new medical equipment is challenging. Moreover, the hospital is treated as a rural hospital for Medicare reimbursement purposes, meaning that it receives less money than do most hospitals in New York State. On top of that, doctors on Long Island pay among the highest medical malpractice premiums in the State. All of this makes recruiting top doctors difficult.

Even so, Dr. Michalos' organization, the

IS IT JUST THE CASINO? WE FOUND OUT

By Debbie Tuma

One of the odd puzzles involving the attempt by the Shinnecocks to obtain federal recognition has been their motives. Until last month, they did not have this recognition. Then a federal judge granted it. Whether this leads to a recognition by the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs, or if it does not, the question still remains — why do they want this?

The obvious answer is that they want to build a casino. In a recent interview, our Assemblyman Fred W. Thiele, who vehemently opposes the building of a casino in these parts — almost everyone is against it — says that that is all the Shinnecocks are interested in. The Indians say this is not about a casino at all. They have lived in poverty, without many of the benefits that others in the area have. Recognition gives them those benefits. To which Thiele replied, "They already receive everything they are entitled to. The only difference federal recognition will get them is the casino."

What is the truth? We looked into the matter. And this is what we found. With full Bureau of Indian Affairs recognition, the Shinnecocks will get all of the following that they do not now.

They will be eligible for a myriad of federal programs and benefits in addition to building a gambling casino. There are two federal agencies which confer benefits and sovereign rights to Indian tribes — the Department of Health and Human Services Indian Health Service (HIS) and the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), both based in Washington, D.C. They have a combined annual budget of over $4 billion, an amount that has increased by $1 billion since the regulatory recognition process was established in 1978. Both agencies have established procedures for funding newly recognized tribes.

At HIS, newly recognized tribes are assigned funds on a case by case basis. At BIA, it is deter-

Hamptons Health Society, does not exist to raise money specifically for Southampton Hospital, nor is it affiliated with the hospital in any way, although the hospital has been and will be the major beneficiary. Rather, Dr. Michalos and his fellow board members consult with their advisory committee of nearly 50 East End physicians about what specific medical goods and services are needed. Specific donations are then earmarked for, or sometimes paid directly, to obtain those particular items and services. The board members and advisors are unpaid volunteers.

Dr. Michalos began this effort in July 2004. Since then, many important items have been acquired. For example, because wheelchairs were being stolen, his group bought seven new wheelchairs, like those at airports, which cannot be folded and stored in a car trunk. They bought a state-of-the-art defibrillator, which even some Manhattan hospitals do not have yet. Perhaps less sexy but certainly as important, they also bought more pillows, blankets and trauma stretchers. Just last week, they bought a special bassinette used for holding jaundiced newborns receiving ultra-violet treatment, at a cost of $5,600. In addition, funds are used to create scholarships for people who wish to become nurses and will commit to spend at least three years working on the East End. So far, about $250,000 in good and services have been spent. Most of the money was raised by Dr. Michalos from his friends and contacts in the Greek community.

Dr. Michalos believes that Southampton Hospital's new CEO, John Kastanis, is "fantastic" and is already doing an "unbelievable job" in making improvements in hospital management, recruiting and other areas. Likewise, he praises the $2 million in free care given by the hospital's physicians last year and the $6 million in free care provided by the hospital. Even so, Dr. Michalos warns that people cannot assume that the hospital will be around forever without the generosity of wealthy Hamptons residents, and that if the hospital were to close, property values would plummet. Hospitals throughout Long Island have closed down, and Southampton Hospital cannot lose money forever. Moreover, even if Mr. Kastanis succeeds in turning the hospital around, Dr. Michalos wants his three 9-year-old daughters and weekend guests to have the same first-rate medical care they would receive in Manhattan.

So, with his quiet fundraising successes behind him, Dr. Michalos decided to set a large fundraising goal and publicize his efforts, as a "wake-up call" to the very people who give freely to Manhattan hospitals and other charities. He is not so concerned that people give to his organization, but rather that they give at all, even if to the hospital directly or to local charitable organizations. He also stressed that buying tickets at charitable events such as the Hamptons Classic is not enough, as the Hospital itself may receive only a small amount.

The $40,000,000 goal set for Hamptons Health Society was chosen in part because that is the amount of debt owed by Southampton Hospital. However, the funds raised will not be used to pay down the debt or otherwise be given to the hospital directly, but will

(as before) go toward specified goods or services that are needed. Eight-figure donations could allow a new hospital wing to be built, and Dr. Michalos hopes a bank or other organization will want to have a new wing named after it. More modest donations can help to attract young doctors, not only by paying their salaries but also by providing housing assistance.

Because so many people who come to the Hamptons are from the Upper East Side of Manhattan and look to New York Hospital for their needs, Dr. Michalos's group has acquired a video-conferencing system to allow communication between Southampton Hospital and New York Hospital. He wants people to view Southampton Hospital as an extension of their City hospital and support it accordingly. He sums up his mission with a reminder: "The life Southampton Hospital saves could be yours."

charged with frantic creativity and people seem to be moving at all times, incessantly trouble shooting. There are guitars in various rooms and jingles are created on the spot. Everyone carries clipboards and walkie-talkies. Phones are always ringing. Of the crew, many have been bused from all over the country and beyond, to our small community. They are housed in Southampton College dorms. Many members of the crew have worked on the great oldies including "Sesame Street," "Fraggle Rock" using cutting-edge special effects in different eras. Bruce Logan, who's in charge of special effects, is the man responsible for exploding the Death Star.

When immersed in the dazzling 3D jungle, singing along to songs over indigenous percussion beats with guru monkeys and tropical fish, one feels far from the familiar paved world of "Sesame Street." This is the point, according to Kriegman, who aims to teach children to look beyond their immediate surroundings, and teach them that they belong to a larger world community.

Kriegman received over $10 million to produce the show from PBS and the Sony Corporation; Sony also bought the rights to sell merchandise depicting the animal characters. This means that by next Christmas parents will be lining up outside of toy stores across America at the crack of dawn; sweet mothers will be clawing and biting each other to buy the last talking Snook doll or original series video game.

These creatures will become as familiar as the faces of presidents and pop stars. Your children will watch them by day and cuddle up with them at night. Soon you will all know Snook quite well, along with Wartz, Bob, Oko, Madge, Smooch, Ick and Winslow. This January marks a pivotal moment in children's programming and it's all happening right here in Wainscott, during the off-season, despite the picketers, on a desolate strip called Industrial Road.

Watch "It's a Big Big World," beginning January 2, 2006 on PBS Kids.

Who's Here

By Debbie Tuma

Two round holes in her wide, wooden floor still remind Arlene Bujese of how she almost didn't open her Newtown Lane art gallery 12 years ago.

"I was getting ready to open, and there were two large chests here, against the wall, which actually fell over and almost killed me," she recalled. "But I managed to avoid a major accident, I've managed to stay open all these years, and I still have the dents in my front entrance hall to prove it."

Sitting on one of her favorite long benches in her gallery, surrounded by paintings and sculptures of the many local artists she's been showing for years, Bujese shared how her recent decision to close her gallery in February has drawn reactions from the community. "I've gotten flowers, notes and letters, from artists and friends of the gallery. I'm not a crybaby, but some of them are so beautiful," she said. "When I decided to close, about six months ago I sent letters first to the artists, then the collectors, and then the press."

Wearing one of her signature gold jewelry pieces that is a work of art unto itself, over a white sweater and slacks, Bujese held up a small painting by Connie Foxx, and a metal sculpture by Bill King, who are both long-time friends and clients, and who had given her these gifts just an hour earlier. "I've handled some of the most exciting and committed artists, and I've had a good working relationship with them, and also with the collectors," she said. "It's been a terrific experience, and I have no regrets. But I can't imagine how I'll feel in March."

Bujese, whose last name is French and Swiss, said in recent years, she has been thinking about retiring from the art gallery business to have more time to herself, and to simply pursue other interests. "I wanted to close last year, but I just couldn't do it because these artists are so good and I care about them," she said. "To lose a gallery is unfortunate."

She said for this reason, she would love to see her business continue as an art gallery, and she's been talking to several entrepreneurs about this idea. "I've also had investors asking me about funding, thinking it's for economic reasons that I'm closing, which isn't true," she explained. "Over the years out here, I've tried to encourage an artists' coop, where 10-20 artists contribute to the financial support of a gallery, because there are so many talented people here. But so far it hasn't worked out."

In her 12 years of running her own gallery, and as the former director of the Benton Gallery in Southampton for eight years before hang in the show, which saves me from going to artists' studios," she said, pointing to the proliferation of paintings on the walls. There are works by the late John Little, who she represented both at the Benton Gallery, and at in earlier days at her first gallery in Washington, D.C., called "Phoenix II." There are also works by her many living local artists, such as Josh Dayton, Carolyn Beegan, Carol Hunt, Darlene Charneco, Priscilla Bowden, Alex Russo, and others. She has also shown the works of the late Elaine de Kooning, Balcombe Greene, and the late Alfonse Ossorio.

"When Ossorio died in 1990, I was the only gallery representing him at the time," she said, showing a copy of his coffee table book inscribed to Bujese in 1982. "He was brilliant, intelligent, and he was the ultimate gentleman," she said. "And his art — talk about a sense of adventure — he certainly followed his own path in his work and in his life."

Bujese, too, followed an early calling to express her artistic ability. Growing up in Park Ridge, New Jersey, her interest in art started in a private prep school where she was chosen to do illustrations for posters. But at 20 years old, her wanderlust and curiosity led her to join American Airlines as a stewardess for the next seven years. During this time, she attended school in Dallas and San Francisco, and then she enrolled in the Corcoran College of Art when she moved to Washington, D.C., majoring in printmaking.

"Flying around the world, I was so inspired by seeing art everywhere I went," she said. "It gave me the energy to want to create art myself, and I eventually quit flying to go to art school full-time." Bujese also earned a degree in religion and philosophy from Hood College in Frederick, Maryland, where she also earned her masters degree in psychology. She then taught art, religion and psychology at St. John's Literary Institution at Prospect Hall in Frederick, Maryland, a college prep school. She later taught studio art at Hood College.

But Bujese admitted that, although she's exhibited as an artist, "I've never had the same ambition to promote myself as an artist. I've enjoyed discovering and promoting other artists."

So when a publisher friend suggested she try her hand at running a gallery, she ventured into the administrative world by taking that, Bujese has represented a long list of artists, and collected a loyal following. Many of these are part of her present "Dealer's Choice" show, which she does at the end of each year. "I take my local artists work that I have downstairs, and I choose the pieces to over the Phoenix Gallery in Washington, D.C. "I felt I knew a lot of artists, and I knew a lot about art," she explained. She started coming to the Hamptons in 1968, when an art professor at the Corcoran invited a bunch of his students to study at his summer studio here.

"I immediately fell in love with this place, and I started meeting all the fascinating artists who lived here then, like Lee Krasner, Willem de Kooning, John Little, Balcombe Greene, and Alfonse Ossorio," she explained. "I also started showing artists from the Hamptons in D.C."

Bujese moved to the Hamptons full-time in 1984, and took over as director of the Benton Gallery in 1986, which she ran until 1993 with owner Dr. Rodney Ryan.

Now, as she looks back over her many years in the gallery business, she said, "During the last few years, I've felt I've done what I had to do. I need more flexibility — I haven't had a weekend off in the past 12 years. Now I can go to weddings and I can go to brunch. I can even give a brunch."

Bujese said she looks forward to re-reading Proust on summer afternoons. "I might even sit on a bench on Newtown Lane, near my old gallery. And I'll go to lots of art openings — on the weekends." When asked if she'll have any kind of closing celebration in February, when her lease is up, she said, "I doubt it — I don't want a party, and anyway, there's nobody here in the winter."

other Muslim extremists who clearly are trying to do us in are no friends of Iraq. It almost seems that, if Bush were President in an earlier and more simple time, his response to Japan's invasion of Pearl Harbor would be to invade Canada. I don't get it." — Dan Rattiner, December 6, 2002

"This week, George W. Bush is going to address the nation and say, from those who have seen the speech, that it is not our job to prove that Saddam Hussein has weapons of mass destruction these days, rather Saddam Hussein's job to prove that he doesn't. As any parent will tell you, having your kid prove he doesn't have something is begging the question. It's illogical, but it gets you the desired results." — Dan Rattiner, January 24, 2003

"Knowing these realities, America must not ignore the threat gathering against us. Facing clear evidence of peril, we cannot wait for the final proof — smoking gun — that could come in the form of a mushroom cloud." — George W. Bush, January 12, 2003.

"There is a downside of going to war. Tens of thousands of people will die. After it is over, one might expect increased terrorist activity. Are we ready for that? Apparently, Bush is." — Dan Rattiner, February 7, 2003.

"To make his case, Bush listed one thing after another that Hussein did that was in violation of the United Nations mandate. I had the feeling that Bush was so single-minded in his purpose to go to war that even the flimsiest bit of information might be blown out of proportion to bolster his case. For example, if an American CIA operative said 'Hussein MAY be talking to al Qaeda,' I had the feeling that by the time it got reported from one person to another and it reached the President, it would be reported as 'Hussein IS talking to al Qaeda' and it would send Bush off into another frenzy. He wouldn't even have checked it out. Powell is going to the United Nations now with documentation for many of Bush's claims. What I am describing is just a feeling. Maybe there is hard evidence. But maybe not. I am confident that our allies, particularly our European allies, will have the brains to sort out the truth. I am sure we will hear about it." — Dan Rattiner, February 7, 2003.

"We'll demand a vote. Let's let everybody put their cards on the table so we can see how they feel about Saddam Hussein." — George W. Bush, February 6, 2003.

"The inspectors shouldn't be driving all over Iraq looking for weapons. They should just set up in a parking lot somewhere and have Hussein bring the weapons in and destroy them. That would be disarmament." — George W. Bush, March 3, 2003.

"On Thursday, Powell was telling reporters that he had learned from Intelligence that Hussein was PLANNING to build the missiles they had destroyed. That night, in a Presidential Press Conference, Bush said Hussein had ORDERED new missiles to replace the ones he destroyed. One can change things if the real report does not make you angry enough. Bush was angry. Bush still is angry." — Dan Rattiner, March 14, 2003.

By Dan Rattiner

Builder Harry Joe Brown, better known to friends as Coco, died in Manhattan at the age of 71 on Wednesday of complications from prostate cancer.

Brown, who also had homes in the Hamptons and West Palm Beach, was a well-known New York real estate developer who had a long and varied career. He was born and raised in Beverly Hills, where his mother was a movie actress (opposite Buster Keaton and Spencer Tracy) and his father a movie producer for RKO. He was educated at Phillips Exeter Academy and at Stanford, and he received his Bachelor's degree magna cum laude at Yale and after that, a Master's degree at Oxford as a Marshall's Scholar.

At the age of 23, he famously arranged for the purchase of 188 acres of Beverly Hills woods at the top of a mountain, and developed it as the exclusive Mulholland Drive community.

He traveled to Europe and lived the artist's life in Paris for a while, then returned to New York where he wrote some screenplays and produced Off-Broadway, developing the plays of Edward Albee and Tennessee Williams.

About ten years ago, Brown acquired a failed 56-acre housing development in the woods of Sagaponack up by East Hampton Airport and planned a stunning successor for it known as "Houses at Sagaponack." The houses would be on lots of two to four acres, would be relatively small for vacation homes — 2,000 to 4,000 square feet — and each would be individually designed by an internationally celebrated architect. Brown arranged for architect Richard Meier to round some up. The development itself would be a work of art.

Among those who are participating in this ongoing project are Michael Graves, Sir Richard Rogers, Henry Smith-Miller, Thomas Phifer and the late Philip Johnson. At the present time, the designs for 34 homes by all 34 architects have been completed, eight homes are under construction of which two have been sold and one other has been completed and sold.

Coco Brown was married and divorced twice, and is survived by his two daughters, Morgan and Esme, both of Beverly Hill, and a grandson.

Jobs and Dating

One of the things that I have started to notice now that most of my friends are out in the real world is how they talk about their jobs when talking to a girl. It is not like I am listening in to their conversations, but whenever I get the details of a date or a possible future date encounter, the first thing that they tell me is that they told them where they work. Most of my friends like to ham up this part of the conversation a little bit in order to impress. For example, if you work as a receptionist for HBO, you would never say to someone that you just met that you work as a receptionist. You would say that you work for HBO and leave it at that. If the person you are trying to impress is smart and starts to press further into what you do to make money, then you respond with, "Oh, I do networking for them."

The thing that is funny to me about this is that every single person my age does this. It is almost like we are ashamed to tell girls what we actually do for some reason. The logic is that if we just shade the truth a little bit, we will have a better chance in the dating department.

We are living in a world where movies and magazines talk about very successful, very rich and very young people and we all feel that we should be one of those. I guess I can understand this. It would be nice to be a movie star, model or famous singer. Everybody wants to get paid millions of dollars to speak, sing or stand in front of a camera. I'm not saying that being one of these guys is bad. I'm just saying that not being one of these guys shouldn't mean that you get down about it.

The real question that I am wondering about is when does stretching the truth about what you are doing with your life end and where does lying begin? Do girls even care at all about what a guy does for work? Do girls like guys that are rich and boring over guys that are not so rich and passionate? Does more money mean you are going to get more dates? Well, I was about to find out.

One night in Sag Harbor at Cigar Bar I told my friend Tom that I wanted to do an experiment on dating. Tom is always up for new ideas and ways to meet women, so he immediately raised an eyebrow. I explained that I wanted to see if it really made a difference to girls when it comes to jobs. I was going to introduce Tom to one girl and tell her that he was one of the founders of Google and that he just bought an estate in the Hamptons. Then I was going to introduce him to another girl and tell her that he worked as a bartender and lived in an apartment. "Okay," Tom said. In fact, Tom is a local from East Hampton and is a sales trainee at Nortel Networks in the city.

I've got to tell you, this experiment yielded some interesting results. I started with the, "My friend really likes you," line. I know that this is kind of grade schoolish, but hey, it worked then, why shouldn't it work now? I decided that I would say that Tom was a bartender first. "Excuse me. Sorry to bother you, but my friend thinks you are really pretty and I want you to meet him. He is a bartender."

"Sure, I would love to meet him."

Tom walked over and the three of us started talking. She didn't seem to mind at all that he was a bartender. The two of them seemed to be hitting it off and after about a half hour, we admitted to her that he wasn't a bartender and that we were doing an experiment. She thought this was the coolest thing ever and couldn't wait to find out how a girl would react to finding out Tom was a founder of Google. She even picked out the next girl.

I took a deep breath and walked over to another girl and said the same thing only this time said that he was one of the founders of Google.

"Where is he?" she said.

"He is the guy in the corner over there."

She looks. "Well, what's wrong with him?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean what's wrong with him?"

"Nothing is wrong with him."

I waved for Tom to come over and the two of them started to talk. I then took a couple steps back, but kept within eyesight. Within five minutes, they shook hands, the girl pointed to her girlfriend and Tom walked over to me. "I started talking about how rich I was and she got annoyed. I don't think that she liked me," he said.

I think that there is something to be said about this issue for both guys and girls. Being happy with yourself and what you are doing is more important than being rich and showing off. But there is another lesson here that I have discovered from this experiment and that is, bartenders get all the girls.

mined by tribal size; newly recognized tribes with 1,500 members or less are provided with a base funding of $160,000, and tribes with 1,501 to 3,000 members get $300,000. Tribes with over 3,000 members are funded on a case by case basis. HIS gets a total budget of $2.4 billion, and BIA gets $9 billion, for a total of $4.3 billion.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) has an extensive list of programs and a wide range of services for Indian people, including subsidies for educational opportunities, social services, law enforcement, courts, real estate services, agriculture and range management, and resource protection. Federal recognition would also provide immunity for certain lawsuits from state and federal governments.

The Indian Health Service (IHS) Agency, which is an adjunct of the Public Health Service, would provide health care services through a network of reservation-based hospitals and clinics. Besides standard medical care, this agency has established programs that specialize in maternal and child health, mental health, substance abuse, home health care and nutrition. The Administration For Native Americans, another agency within this group, has programs aimed at strengthening tribal governments supporting the social and economic development of the reservations. Other Federal agencies serving the needs of the Indian people include the departments of Housing and Urban Development, Justice, Agriculture, Education, Labor, Commerce, and Energy.

Like all other citizens who meet eligibility requirements, all American Indians and Alaska natives are eligible to receive state services such as Temporary Assistance for Needy families, Supplemental Security Income, the Food Stamp Program, and the Low Income Heating and Energy Assistance Program.

So far, 55.7 million acres of land belong to Indian tribes and individuals. Since 1934, the total acreage held in trust by the federal government for the benefit of tribes and their members has increased from 49 million to 54 million acres.

According to the website www.doi.gov, "With recognition, the federal government can take land in trust for tribes that may not have a land base or may want to add to their land base. This raises concerns from local communities regarding the loss of local jurisdiction over the land. For example, land taken in trust is no longer subject to local property taxes and zoning ordinances. Also, gambling may occur on land held in trust by the federal government for tribes and their members."

Indian gambling started in the late 1970s when a number of tribes began to establish bingo operations as a supplemental means of funding tribal operations. According to this website, "Recognized tribes may conduct, license and regulate Class II gambling if the state in which the tribe is located permits such gambling and the tribe adopts a gambling ordinance that is approved by the NIGC."

The Bureau of Indian Affairs provides education services to 47,588 Indian children in 184 schools and dormitories. The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains relationships with 562 tribes across the country.

The Sheltered Island By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Island #377 A Great Institution closes...

The end of an era....Shelter Island Books & Video, after twenty five years in the same location, an Island institution, is closing. It's an old story. Anyone who has rented on Shelter Island knows the day eventually comes when the rent goes up higher than the budget can handle. It's a pity. I sure will miss the place.

The beautiful and brilliant Janet Olinkiewicz has been my family's official Media Advisor for years. Some people have legal advisors. We had a Media Advisor. You could walk in and ask her for recommendations for viewing for all ages and stages without having to spend half an hour reading summations through torn plastic. She knows every video ever put out. Never play the Screen Edition of Trivia Pursuit with Janet unless she gives you a two pie handicap. In addition to videos, she always had a great selection of books and games.

I bought my kids first Scrabble game there. And after they lost half the letters, I bought a second Scrabble game there. Then my mother borrowed that one for visiting nieces to play with and they lost the 'Z' and 2 vowels, so Mom had to buy me a third Scrabble game from there. I now keep the letters in a zip lock bag. When I visit other people's homes, while most people scan medicine cabinets, I scan kids rooms and steal Scrabble letters so that I always have a full stash in case of a nuclear winter or worse, getting snowed in with bored children.

I think Janet knows the phone number of everyone on Shelter Island. She is such a doll, she'd order a book or movie and hold it for you till your next payday. The store was a unique entity. Janet never needed security cameras in the store because of the squeaky floors. Janet could tell where anyone was in the store at anytime. She never needed a bell at the door to tell her somebody just came in. There was a big squeak under the entrance arch that you couldn't avoid. There was a high pitched squeak in front of the Mystery Section. A low grunt from the floor in front of the New Releases. There were at least seven distinctive squeaky locator planks throughout the store. By the book section was a leaky ceiling. I think it was repaired every two years, but it was always leaking.

My brother David, a movie buff who rented or bought every movie there, would occasionally go and fetch a cup of soup for Janet from the Pharmacy. I don't know if he did that out of the goodness of his heart or because he was trying to get a discount...

David was living above the video store in winter around 1989 when he heard a big crash at 3 a.m., as someone shoved the air conditioning unit into the store window to gain access. Dave stood in front of the Video Store in his robe, slippers, and big furry hunter hat with ear flaps while he waited for the police. Sgt. Artie Springer showed up when David called. After laughing at the nut in the fur hat and bathrobe guarding the front door, he arrested the non-islander inside who was later roasted and eaten at one of the firemen's barbecues. Because what happens on the Island, stays on the Island...

For his heroism in the face of a freezing cold winter night, Janet let David pick any video he wanted. He still has it in a place of honor on his shelf. It's one of his awards. He calls it his Order of the Knights of the VHS. Of course, the story has grown a bit since the original telling and now includes him fighting off Zombies, Grasshoppers, having Sex on the Beach and other drinks.

I wonder what will be in the building next. We could use a shoe store. We could use an office supply store. We could use a clothing store, or something else practical. I hope it doesn't turn into some schlocky tourist trap. We need something like...like a Book, Video & Games store!

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

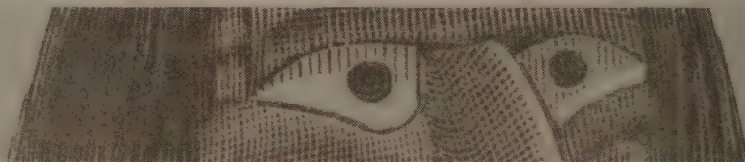

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

The Plum Island Story

What It Was, What It Is and Where It's Going

By Thomas Sarc

For those that don't know, Plum Island, formerly Fort Terry, is a facility that studies animal diseases. It is located about one and a half miles off the coast of Orient Point. In 1826, the United States government purchased three acres on Plum Island for a lighthouse. In 1897, 130 more acres were purchased for defending the coast. Soon after, the United States government built Fort Terry as a headquarters for the Army. In 1901, the rest of the island was bought. During World War II, soldiers were trained to arm torpedoes on Fort Terry.

During World War II, an outbreak of "Foot and Mouth" disease broke out in Mexico. Over the next few years, over $100 million was spent on research to cure the disease. In 1946, a disease laboratory was built at Fort Terry by the government. Fort Terry was closed in 1948 because we were no longer at war and it was no longer needed.

In 1953, the Army turned over part of its facilities on the island to the Agriculture Department and the island was officially opened as an animal disease laboratory. In 1971, the press visited the island to get information on the studies of different diseases but were refused any information about the use of Plum Island the government declared the island "classified." To this day it is said that much of the work done on Plum Island is secret. Early documentation suggests that Plum Island was involved in biological war research. The research continued until President Nixon "officially" ended the biological warfare program in 1969.

The island itself is mysterious; much about it remains classified. None of the 200 plus employees live on the island; they commute from Connecticut and Long Island. The island is accessible by government ferry and local sailors who have strayed too close have reported being warned off by armed military personnel.

There has only been one outbreak on the island itself, the Foot and Mouth disease outbreak in 1978, which was contained by killing all the livestock. The US government maintains that there never has been a leak to the mainland. There have been theories saying that Lyme disease originated on Plum Island, since its first documented case appeared 13 miles northeast of the facility.

Some people are concerned that the facility on Plum Island could come under attack by terrorists. Nelson Demille wrote a novel called Plum Island, a mystery thriller involving murder near the island. Dr. Hannibal Lecter was offered a "vacation" on Plum Island by the FBI in the novel The Silence of the Lambs.

Not all news about Plum Island is mysterious, however. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, Plum Island research has led to advances in the treatment of Foot and Mouth disease, African horse sickness, African swine fever, vaccines for foreign animal diseases and import/export procedures for ham and other meat.

Plum Island is now under the authority of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). In August, they announced that they would replace the aging Plum Island Animal Disease Center with a "next generation biological and agricultural defense facility" at a location yet to be determined. The DHS, which assumed responsibility of the facility from the Department of Agriculture in June 2003, says the center is an essential component of the national strategy for protecting US agriculture from a bioterrorist attack involving the introduction of foreign animal diseases. Yet the 50-year-old facility will soon become obsolete, the DHS warned.

The DHS plans for Plum Island describe a new National Bio and Agro-defense Facility capable of supporting increasing levels of research and development to meet concerns about accidental or intentional introduction of foreign animal diseases. The new facility would allow for zoonotic disease research.

The initiative is in keeping with Homeland Security Presidential Directive 9, which directs the Agriculture and Homeland Security Secretaries to develop plans to provide "safe, secure and state of the art agriculture bio-containment laboratories that research and develop diagnostic capabilities for foreign animal and zoonotic diseases." President Bush has already requested $23 million in his 2006 budget for the design and initiation of the new facility. The DHS has announced that it will conduct a conceptual study to identify key requirements at the facility, along with a cost-benefit analysis.

There is no doubt that the Plum Island center is greatly in need of critical renovations and upgrades. For years, the AVMA, US Animal Health Association, American Association of Veterinary Laboratory Diagnosticians, and other groups have been calling for improvements. Following the announcement of Plum Island closing, Dr. W. Ron DeHaven and Edward B. Knipping, PhD, APHIS and ARS administrators, respectively, assured stakeholders in a letter that Plum Island would not be closing now or anytime soon. If the new facility is located off Plum Island, transition of USDA and DHS programs to the new facility will be gradual and orderly, and unlikely to begin for at least another five years, the administrators wrote.

Plum Island's future is still "up in the air." But whatever is in the cards for this small, pork-chop shaped piece of land, one thing is for certain, it is one interesting place.

Lighting Up The Tree

Head To Vineyard 48 For Thier Tree Lighting Celebration

By R.B. Stuart

This Saturday Vineyard 48 in Cutchogue is having their first annual Christmas tree lighting. The vineyard, with its Italian flavor, will offer an afternoon open house of holiday eats and festivities. Starting at 2:00 p.m. and running through 6:00 p.m., live carolers will be singing your favorite holiday music. Bring the kiddies because the Cutchogue Fire Department will be providing transportation for Santa who is expected to arrive at 3:00 p.m. Make sure that you grab your camera because you'll want to snap a few of him climbing down from the fire truck and when your kids are sitting on Santa's lap, whispering their long held wishes.

The lighting of their 20-foot Douglas Fir Christmas tree will be in their tasting room at 5:00 p.m. and will surely be an exciting and fun time. There will be hot apple cider, cookies, cheese, crackers, fruit, and of course, their amazing wine. Vineyard 48 has an excellent wine list to choose from: 11 varietals, including two that won medals over the summer from the NY State Fair Commercial Wine Competition. They were awarded a silver medal for their 2003 Chardonnay, a fresh and vibrant Chablis style with highlights of white peach, ripe apple and fine yeast notes ($15.99) and a bronze medal for their 2002 Merlot that has a big taste with highlights of blackberries, coffee and dark chocolate coupled with aromas of prunes, figs and toasted oak ($19.99).

It's apparent the Pepia's, the owners of the vineyard, have a Midas touch in wine making. In the beginning the mom and son team hired two consultants with a combined knowledge of 53 years in the winemaking business. Winemaker Roman Roth and Steven Mudd steered the Pepia's to winemaker Matthew Berenz, who brought them the medals. Vineyard 48 started out producing 3,000 cases of wine and their projected goal is to increase to 15,000.

Vineyard 48 is the only vineyard to add the Little Cigar Factory to their premises. The Factory specializes in hand rolled cigars, personalized humidors and cigar boxes. They carry a wide array of box selections from 2 - 25 cigars, inexpensive lighters, cigar cutters, and offer custom engraved boxes and labels for those pondering holiday ideas for clients, friends or family who may be smokers, or enjoy a nice cigar now and then.

Throughout the first two weeks of December, sensational art photographer Harvey Hellering will have 25 pieces on display, which will be available for purchase if you want to treat yourself to a holiday gift, or need one for those artsy friends of yours.

Vineyard 48 is located on Rt. 48 in Cutchogue and is open seven days a week from 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. for the Saturday event. There are no ticket prices, it's an open house and they're doing all the finger food, so bring your appetite! For more information call 631-734-5200.

North Fork Artist of The Week

Photographer, Ralph Pugliese Jr.

By R.B. Stuart

Ralph Pugliese Jr. has been a landscape and seascape photographer on the North and South Fork for the last 18 years. Pugliese, in my opinion, is an underrated jewel. Once discovered, his gifted eye, sense for detail and natural ability to shoot the most picturesque Long Island and New York scenes leave you staring at the photograph and make you feel like you are falling into it. Although his breathtaking vistas of Mother Nature at work are sold primarily at local gift shops and wineries, an extensive selection can be seen at Pugliese Vineyards. This one man show makes it easy to wall paper your house with his photographic art work and with his inexpensive pricing, once you've bought one you'll keep coming back for more.

Pugliese was born 39 years ago into a family of three in Flushing, Queens. As a child he thought he was going into architecture, "But my high school mechanical drawing teacher pushed me into photography, recommending I go to college to pursue it," Pugliese said.

As a child he remembered his mother painting, "She would paint from photographs. Never having visited Italy, she painted a large canvas of Rome," he recalled. Maybe that's where he inherited the gift of photography, mixing her muse from photos to canvas; he now paints his own canvases with his eye; large, grand and awe inspiring.

Originally shooting all black and white, Pugliese's first camera was a 35 mm Canon. "People were more interested in color, because that's the way we see everything," he explained.

He graduated from the School of Visual Arts with a BFA in Photography and went on to publish his work in Popular Photography, Long Island Monthly, Italian Elle, Diversion Magazine and Historic Preservation. He began visiting Cutchogue in 1980 eventually moving there in 1988.

"I just like to see the beauty in nature and to explore different areas. It's a challenge sometimes, you go some place 20 times and get nothing, other times you go there once and get something amazing. I enjoy that," he concedes. "My photos make a lot of people happy. Periodically, I receive letters and e-mails from people commenting on my work. Only over the last few years have I begun appreciating it. The impact my work has on people stays in the back of my mind now," he added.

Although he still faces challenges in trying to get better images, "I'm always trying to make things better. After shooting here for 18 years, it becomes a challenge to get new and exciting images. Now with the age of digital photography, shooting 4 x 5 transparencies is a dying industry. I really don't think digital cameras are capable of doing what slides do."

"I am mostly inspired by the people who enjoy the work, along with being able to travel and take pictures. Going to new places and seeing the changes of season and the light inspires me," Pugliese shared.

"My work has been influenced by Ansel Adams. Reading about him and how he'd lug around his 4 x 5 camera. Going out into the wilderness for days. I don't spend days in the wilderness, but I have hiked two miles with my 4 x 5 camera and equipment in a back pack just to get to a location to shoot," he chuckled.

His goal is, "To publish a coffee table book with the best out of the thousands and thousands of pictures I've taken. I know I can do almost anything that's involved with landscapes and seascapes. I'd like to be published in National Geographic. In ten years I will still be in Cutchogue and will continue shooting the area. I'd like to develop a larger website of my work that would display 1000 images or more," he says.

Pugliese doesn't have any regrets, but what he's passionate about is, "Pizza," he says with a burst of laughter. Along with his family, good friends, "There's nothing in life that's more important," he concluded.

You can see a majority of his work at his brother's vineyard, Pugliese on Old Main Rd. in Cutchogue. The vast array of framed and unframed prints, posters, post cards and greeting cards, 2006 Calendars, screen savers and magnets are perfect holiday gifts for those wanting to remember the beauty of Long Island. Or see it on the web at www.ralphjr.com. He is also available for commercial work, including architectural and industrial photography.

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Miscellaneous Sips for the Holiday Season

Thanksgiving has come and gone. Our sights are now set on Hanukkah and Christmas, with New Year's lurking in the background.

It's holiday season boys and girls.....one of the busiest, most enjoyable and sometimes stressful times of the year. We all have a lot on our minds and your favorite wine columnist is no different. So, with that in mind, here are some miscellaneous sips (and thoughts) for the season.

Drink sparkling wine for Christmas and/or Hanukkah. Everyone drinks bubbly for New Year's, but the fizzy stuff is a great way to celebrate any occasion. Plus, with racy acidity and freshness, it's great with a wide range of foods. Drink Lieb Family Cellars' Blanc de Blanc with appetizers and then move on to bottles of Wolfer Estate or The Old Field bubbly with dinner.

Drink it again on New Year's Eve. Drink it just because there's no better way to ring in the New Year. My choice: Lenz Winery 1991 Cuvee RD, the boldest and most interesting local sparkler.

Don't depend on "expert" lists for wine pairing. Every year wine and food magazines bombard us with lists of "perfect" matches for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinner – both of which usually involve a vast array of menu items. Use these lists only as a guide. It's nearly impossible to find a wine that goes with everything on your holiday table. Try a variety of wines with your celebratory meals and see what you like best. That's the best way to go.

Take wine every where you go. No matter what holiday party you're attending, wine is always a welcome gift, especially a local wine. Sadly, most people have little experience with Long Island wine, so take the opportunity to introduce them. Plus, if you take a bottle you know you like (always a good idea) you can tell your host, "Hey, let's open this bottle and see if you like it." This will also rescue you from drinking the plonk served at many parties.

Let's welcome Leucadia National Corporation to our backyard. You probably heard that Napa's Pine Ridge Winery bought Broadfields Cellars and Charles John Vineyard, but Pine Ridge is just another of Leucadia's holdings. Regardless, their presence here just proves the promise our region holds. They could have bought a vineyard anywhere in the world, but chose the North Fork.

Diliberto Winery 2003 Chardonnay is worth seeking out. You probably won't find it in your local wine shop, but Sal Diliberto's elegant, Burgundian-style Chardonnay offers deliciously balanced acidity layered with citrus, butterscotch and toasted almond flavors. It is a real charmer. Call 722-3416 or email Sal directly at diliberto1@msn.com to order.

332.5 Million Gifts Given And Counting

The Vail Leavitt This Saturday Will Host A Concert Benefiting Toys For Tots

By R.B. Stuart

Head down to Riverhead at the Vail-Leavitt Music Hall this Saturday and support a great cause that gives to children year after year, the Annual Toys for Tots Benefit Concert. "Last year it was the best Christmas we ever had. It was a gift to ourselves. It made us feel that it was the most meaningful thing you could do," said Jessie Haynes, event director and East Quogue musician. "We had such a great time and collected more toys and cash donations than expected. This year we decided to do it bigger and better. And with the Vail-Leavitt Hall practically giving the hall to us. (the Marine Toys for Tots Foundation), we were thrilled," Haynes exclaimed.

Bob Barta, Vail-Leavitt Hall president and historian of the hall, gave me some history on how this hall that supports so many local musicians and benefits came about. "The hall is located on what is today Peconic Avenue. It was the talk of the town when David F. Vail, a local lumber dealer, built it with the help of his son, George M. Vail. The Music Hall was but one of the Vails' most ambitious undertakings, the other being the purchase from the U. S. Government of the decommissioned sail-powered battleship Ohio. Displaying their flair for showmanship, the Vails' planned to exhibit the Ohio as long as the public showed interest in the old hulk, then scrap it for its usable parts. Unfortunately, this plan didn't work and it was towed to Greenport harbor. The tired old Ohio sank to the bottom before many visitors could catch a glimpse of it. It remains there to this day."

If you're eager for some holiday cheer and nothing better than to put a smile on a child's face, then this event on Saturday shouldn't be missed. Admission is free if you bring a new unwrapped toy for a boy or girl or both, or a cash donation at the door is accepted to support the children in the local community, as well as victims of hurricane Katrina.

The doors open for a night of music and celebration at 7:00 p.m. Headlining will be Lori Carson, an Academy Award Winning Recording Artist, along with four other musical acts. Handmade jewelry by local children will be available to purchase in the lobby from 7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. A cash bar will offer beer, wine and bottled water in the Cabaret Room.

There are two stages in the Music Hall and the line up will commence on the bottom stage in the Cabaret Room at 7:30 p.m. with acoustic singer/songwriters Rachel Haynes & Kristine Bogan. Upstairs on the Main Stage at 8:30 p.m., Jessie Haynes & Cowgirl Ecstasy, a gypsy rock/ cowgirl funk band will open for headliner Lori Carson, a modern folk musician, at 10:00 p.m.

Marine Toys for Tots Foundation announced in September that in addition to looking after millions of needy children nationwide at Christmas, they will devote a significant effort to looking after children who are victims of Hurricane Katrina as well as Hurricane Rita.

Toys for Tots began in 1947 when Major Bill Hendricks from the United States Marine Corps Reserve and a group of Marine Reservists in Los Angeles collected and distributed 5,000 toys to needy children. The idea came from his wife, Diane. In the fall of 1947, she handcrafted a Raggedy Ann doll and asked him to deliver the doll to an organization, which would give it to a needy child at Christmas. When he determined that no agency existed, they decided to start one. In 1947 the pilot project was so successful that the Marine Corps adopted Toys for Tots and expanded it into a nationwide campaign. The hallmark of the program remains today, "Bring the joy of Christmas to America's needy children."

Hendricks was a Marine Reservist on weekends. In civilian life he was the Director of Public Relations for Warner Brothers Studio. This enabled him to convince celebrities to support Toys for Tots. In 1948, Walt Disney designed the first Toys for Tots poster and logo, which is used today. In 1956 the Toys for Tots theme was recorded and sung by Nat "King" Cole, Peggy Lee, and Vic Damone. Bob Hope, John Wayne, Doris Day, Tim Allen, Kenny Rogers and Billy Ray Cyrus are a few of the long list of celebrities who have given their time and talent to Toys for Tots.

Over the 57 years that the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve Toys for Tots Program has been in operation, Marines have distributed more than 332.5 million toys to 158.7 million needy children. This charitable endeavor has made U.S. Marines the unchallenged leaders in looking after needy children at Christmas. Over its 14-year lifespan, the Marine Toys for Tots Foundation has supplemented local toy collections with more than 55.5 million toys valued at more than $284 million.

The Vail-Leavitt Music Hall is located at 18 Peconic Ave. Riverhead. For more information call 631-727-5782 or contact Director Jessie Haynes at www.jessiehaynes.com.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Diwali, a joyous Indian holiday and one of the longest festivals in the Hindu year, was celebrated on November 1 and lasted for several days. Whatever the fables and legends behind the celebration may be, Diwali is generally known as the festival of lights. Doorways are hung with mango leaves and marigolds and families exchange sweets, wear new clothes and buy jewelry. Not unlike the customs of the coming winter holidays.

Carol King, formerly of Dan's Papers, whose husband is of Indian heritage, wishes to share some family recipes, in particular her mother-in-law's creamy rice pudding made with basmati rice, cardamom, saffron and almonds. Sugary temptations, known as mithai, are particularly important during Diwali. Sweetmaking has been an honored culinary specialty in India, along with the cult of dairy, resulting in milky sweets such as kulfi, a reduction of milk incorporating whole cardamom pods, almonds and pistachios into a frozen delight.

In addition to sweets, Carol, or CJ as we called her at Dan's, included her own version of a family favorite, curried shrimp heady with turmeric, garam masala, and curry she serves for the holiday. Sweet or savory, Diwali, with all its frenzy of eating and shopping, is the steady, burning lamp, a constant symbol of an illuminated mind.

CAROL'S CURRIED SHRIMP, INDIAN STYLE

Carol, formerly of Dan's Papers offers her husband's family recipe for curried shrimp. A must try for any shrimp lover - it's just delicious! She suggests serving the shrimp with chapati, Indian flat bread.

Serves 6 - 8

3 tablespoons unsalted butter
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
3-4 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 1/2 teaspoons turmeric powder
1/2 teaspoon garam masala powder
1/2 teaspoon curry powder
1 pound large shrimp, shelled and deveined
Wondra flour or potato starch for dusting the shrimp
1/2 cup half and half, Optional
Coarse (kosher) salt to taste

Chapati for serving, optional

1. Melt the butter with the oil in a large, 12-inch, heavy skillet. Add the turmeric, garam masala and curry and stir to mix then add the garlic and sauté the mixture about 1 minute.

2. Meanwhile place the cleaned shrimp one layer deep on a work plate and sprinkle the flour or starch through a sieve to coat the shrimp on both sides. Add the dusted shrimp to the skillet and sauté for 2 minutes. With tongs turn the shrimp and sauté to 1 to 1 1/2 minutes longer until the shrimp turn pink. Season with a dash of salt as needed. Remove shrimp to a serving platter and pour the half and half, if using, into the drippings in the pan. Over medium-high heat stir the liquid to deglaze the drippings in the pan and pour over the shrimp. Serve at once with chapati, if desired.

MULTAN DEV'S KHEER

As is her custom Multan Devi, of Indian heritage, celebrates with family and friends to share sweets during Diwali. For the recipe I toasted whole cardamom seeds then finely ground them in a spice grinder.

Serves 8-10

1 cup basmati rice
2 quarts whole or 2% milk
2 teaspoons finely ground cardamom seeds
1 1/4 cups sugar
1/8 teaspoon saffron threads
1/4 cup slivered almonds

1. Rinse the rice in a large strainer 2 or 3 times to rid the starch. Transfer to a large 5 quart saucepan and pour in the milk. Bring to the edge of a boil while stirring with a wooden spoon (watch this procedure carefully as the milk can boil over). Add the remaining ingredients and stir frequently to prevent the rice from sticking for about 35-40 minutes until the milk is absorbed and rice is still firm.

2. Remove the pan from heat and stir in the almonds. Transfer the mixture to a 6-8 cup gratin or shallow serving dish. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate for up to a day or two and serve.

KULFI

Kulfi, an ice cream made with a reduction of milk, can easily be made at home with or without an ice cream maker.

Serves 6

9 cups 2% or whole milk
10 whole cardamom pods

6 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons chopped blanched almonds
3 tablespoons chopped unsalted pistachios

1. Bring the milk to a boil in a large heavy pot. As soon as the milk begins to rise, turn the heat down, adjusting it to allow the milk to simmer vigorously, without boiling over. Add the cardamom pods and reduce the milk to one-third its original amount, about 3 cups. Stir frequently stirring in the film that forms on the top.

2. When the milk has reduced, remove the cardamom pods and discard them. Add the sugar and stir the simmering liquid gently for 2-3 minutes. Pour the reduced milk into a bowl and let cool completely. Stir in the almonds and half the pistachios. Cover the bowl with aluminum foil and put it in the freezer. (Or put into an ice cream maker if you have one and get it going.) Put 6 ramekins into the freezer.

3. Every 15 minutes or so remove the ice cream mixture from the freezer and give it a good stir in order to break up the crystals. As the ice cream begins to freeze, it will become harder and harder to stir. When it becomes almost impossible to stir, take the container out of the freezer, and working quickly divide the ice cream between the cups and sprinkle with remaining pistachios. Cover each ramekin with foil and return to the freezer to let the ice cream harden.

JUST FOR KIDS

Dear Santa, This Year I Would Like . . .

Has anyone else noticed? There's this man that I've been spotting just about everywhere lately. He's always dressed in the same thing and looks like he's really in need of a good shave. He has this handsome and refined air about him, like he's someone worth knowing. This guy really gets around. I've seen him at the mall surrounded by smiling and crying children...usually the perfect combination of both. He always has candy canes and he's awfully jolly for someone who gets poked, prodded, spit up on and probably subjected to many wet leaking diapers. But he still smiles, still laughs with his belly shaking like a bowl full of jelly. His red suit never looks anything but sharp and he's kind to little people, reindeer and seems to like the cold. Yet, it's been rumored that he's been spotted in West Palm during the off-season. Nevertheless, this wonderful jolly guy manages to write back to every single child that writes to him and is often eager to grant a wish or deliver a gift to someone in need. For as long as many of us can remember we have loved and cherished Santa Claus and his mystical ways.

Remember as a child when you used to sit down, get out your markers and crayons and create a picture and a letter to Santa telling him what you wished for that holiday season? I remember taking the JC Penny catalogue, cutting out the pictures and then, just in case Santa got a little confused or busy, I'd add the page numbers and price. I figured he was on a budget with a portion to go to each child, so I'd limit my list to my five favorite things and two alternates. My family celebrated both Hanukkah and Christmas, so I was technically allowed to ask for two presents for each holiday, but always put in extra just in case. The letter used to be left out a few nights before Christmas with a plate of cookies. It was amazing how hungry Santa was on those nights....we'd find a bite in every cookie.

Santa is now high tech. You can track him as he travels from the North Pole, you can instant message him, and you can e-mail him. If you are still in favor of having your child do the old-fashioned letter, the post offices will forward the letters to Santa's helpers who will happily try and answer them for you. According to the friendly staff at the Southampton Post Office, once a letter is received and identified as a "Dear Santa" letter it is sent to the Long Island District postal plant where staff sort the letters, scan them for needs and the public is invited to be initiated as elves and asked to answer and/or send gifts to the writer. The post offices, including the Southampton one, are extending their weekday and Saturday hours to make sure every last holiday package is sent out and every child's wish comes true.

There's a wonderful website called www.operationlettersanta.com that has some wonderful interactive activities for your child to truly get in the spirit of giving. There are poignant stories of children who wrote letters to Santa looking for simple things such as a new pair of shoes that fit, or pencils for school. There's a way that you can contact the site managers and have your family "be Santa" for a family in need. There's a countdown clock, recipes and games and you can get personalized Christmas lists, e-mail the jolly man in red and get a reply within a few days. As with any website, please monitor your child and review Internet safety rules with them.

The site www.emailsanta.com is an adorable one. Your child can write a letter to Santa, check the "Naughty or Nice List," play "Rudolph Trivia," watch Christmas webcams, try Santa's Advent Calendar and even have your pet send an e-mail to Rudolph (that one is definitely interesting). One of the cutest features on this site is that Santa will personally autograph a picture of himself for your child to treasure and download.

Contact your local post office if you wish to play "Santa" for a child, or simply enjoy having your child write to Santa. Enjoy every moment of this innocent time in which the jolly man in red seems magical and real, where elves make beautiful toys and reindeer can fly. It simply goes by so fast.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Wolf Swamp / Elliston Park

The day after Thanksgiving my wife, sister, and stepson all wanted to take a "walk it off hike." I suggested that we join a trails group hike, but moving slowly and recovering from "turkey trance," we took a later hike on our own. My sister suggested someplace picturesque with wetlands, so I decided on Wolf Swamp.

Directions: Head north on Magee Street, cross over Sebonac Road; continue until you reach a five corner intersection; turn right onto Millstone Brook Road. After a short distance, you'll see a small parking area (on the left) for the Nature Conservancy Greef Wildlife Sanctuary at Big Woods. This area accesses the Paumanok Path. A short distance past this area is a much used, informal parking triangle. It is an unimproved dirt parking area located where Millstone Brook Road and Scott Road converge. We crossed Millstone Brook Road towards a post, a rail fence, and a couple of signs: one that says "Wolf Swamp Preserve, The Nature Conservancy," and another that welcomes people to the preserve, lists the prohibited activities, gives contact information, (phone 631-329-7689), and states the Nature Conservancy's mission, which is "to preserve plants and animals by protecting the lands and waters they need to survive."

We followed the loop trail to the right, through the 20-acre preserve, marked by yellow and green blazes. As we reached the crest of a small hill, Big Fresh Pond came into view through the bare branches of hickory, beech, and oak trees. We followed a boardwalk over some wetlands and passed some steps to shore. We began heading back on the western segment of the Wolf Swamp loop but soon took an unmarked trail off to our right that led us across the boat ramp access road into the Paumanok Path and the 133-acre Elliston Town Park. The white rectangular blazes of the path are new and easy to follow. We followed the blazes across a terraced area by the town beach and the granite memorial to Emma Rose Elliston and back into the woods. Here the Paumanok Path shares the same route as the Big Fresh Pond Nature Trail; along with the white rectangular blazes, you will see an occasional yellow diamond or owl blaze. The trail travels through an upland oak hickory forest and enters into a swamp with red maple and tupelo. We then followed a footbridge that crosses a stream running from Big Fresh Pond. During spring this is a good vantage point to see alewife swimming upstream into the pond to spawn from North Sea Harbor. From here the trail brought us along the edge of the pond. During the warm months I enjoy seeing box turtles here.

The trail then turned north away from the pond; we found ourselves approaching a farm where a deer fence blocks the Paumanok Path. We left the blocked trail, and followed the yellow diamond blazes of the nature trail instead. We passed through a grove of spruce; the seedlings in the understory were deep green and the lower branches of the mature trees were bare; green reemerged only at their tops. We entered a grove of red maple and walked on planks to cross the wetlands. We soon came out by the (locked) restrooms, headed back towards the terraced beach and turned right to head back along a segment of the Paumanok Path that we had walked earlier. We followed this segment of path a short distance to the boat ramp access road. Here we turned right and followed the white blazes up the access road through a chain-link gate and crossed Millstone Brook Road. We entered an area of steep knobs and deep kettles with lovely vernal ponds and winter views north of Sebonac Creek and Scallop Pond. After we followed the trail across Scott Road we enjoyed views of Sebonac Creek at the crest of every knob; the trees here were shad and beech.

When we reached a jag in the trail that took us to the edge of the Creek, the sun was setting and the light over the creek was beautiful. We continued along the trail, entering a beech wood. The next left turn blaze led us onto a dirt road. Instead of turning right to follow the Paumanok Path to the Nature Conservancy parking lot and Big Woods trail, we continued to walk the dirt road. We soon found ourselves facing across Scott Road, looking at our car on the "parking triangle." On Dec. 4 Glorian gives a similar 4-mile hike for STPS (631-283-2638).

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

In the last article that I wrote, when referring to the automobile industry, I said that due to superior global competition, General Motors had best watch out. As you all know, just last week the General announced that in the next few years, it will close several major car factories and lay off thirty thousand workers. What's bad for General Motors is bad for the United States.

What irks me most is that their chief executives have all sorts of excuses for General Motors' poor performance, from increased foreign competition to expensive health care costs per worker. The cold hard truth is the fact that, for the last ten years, General Motors has been making dumb, dull products that nobody wants. Their best selling points were incredible rebates that seemed to make their products a bargain, real or imagined.

Take, for instance, their introduction of the Hummer H2. While much improved from over the military version, the H1, it still underachieved in the gas mileage department. Then there was the Pontiac Aztec, one of the most ungainly looking vehicles ever produced. Gas prices have been rising into the stratosphere over the last few years but the only car General Motors produced as an economy car was the Chevrolet Cavalier, which was a stage coach as compared to the high MPG models offered by Honda and Toyota. The main reason GM pinned all its hopes on large vehicles was that there was more profit built into selling larger, more expensive vehicles. Didn't anyone notice that perhaps selling millions of small vehicles rather than a few large ones would yield profit?

The General has had two success stories recently, but not without caveats.

The new, magnificent Chevrolet Corvette Z06 has proven to the world that we can build a "faster than Ferrari" motorcar for one third the price. As powerful as the Corvette is, I'm disappointed that the engine powering the car is based upon a fifty-year-old design. However, when one thinks about it, so is a Porsche motor.

Then we have the new Pontiac Solstice. Here we have a car that has been the darling of the automotive press for the last six months, getting gobs of great write-ups and free publicity for General Motors. Here's a GM product that everybody finally seems to want. The several GM dealers I talked to said their allotment of six, yes I said six, cars was used up for 2006. Are the product planners at GM insane? Stop making Buicks for a while and make Solstices.

Ford and Chrysler have also been remiss with their product development, although not as bad as General Motors. The Ford Escort of past years was an excellent and dependable economy car, though not up to the build quality of the Japanese competitors. The current Ford Focus is probably the best handling small car in the world, and an excellent buy. It hasn't been properly promoted. Did you know that it is the best selling car in England, and one of the best selling vehicles in Europe? Ford sat on its midsize Taurus sedan too long and ran the design into the ground, losing sales to Toyota and Honda, but they now seem to be back on track with their new Fusion sedan.

Probably the best thing that happened to Chrysler is that they were purchased by Daimler Benz. For a while they were building some incredibly stupid cars. The whole line of K cars were terrible machines, all designed and sold during the reign of Lee Iacocca. Why was this man a hero? Chrysler certainly has the most attractive product line in America. Their top selling four door Chrysler 300 makes the competition look dated. I'm not crazy about the chopped-and-channelled goon look of its products, but I have to say they are all au courant and clever looking. Two problems. The only small car that Chrysler produces is the PT Cruiser, whose retro looks are getting rather boring. What's next? And why do they keep advertising big bore hemi-engined cars and trucks that we all know get under fifteen miles per gallon? Doesn't anyone at Chrysler read the papers and notice the price of gas is off the wall?

I love American iron, and in fact, my daily driver is a Ford Focus SVT. There was a time when American cars were kings of the road, in any country. American V-8 engines were put into many foreign cars, like British Range Rovers and Italian DeTomaso Panteras. Ferrari and Jaguar used American automatic transmissions. Our air conditioning and luxury accessories systems were the envy of the world. At one time America built the fastest and best made automotive products the world had ever seen. I don't know if anyone remembers, but in the famous French film, A Man and a Woman, the male lead drove a 1965 Ford Mustang fastback throughout Europe. In the film Gran Prix James Gurner's ride was a 1966 Shelby Mustang that he drove from one European race circuit to another. In those days, whether Cadillacs or Mustangs, American cars were the cars of the moment throughout the world.

This can all happen again, but our auto manufacturers have to open their eyes. Build products for the times. Think not years, but decades ahead. We all know that the Japanese and the Koreans build excellent products. Our inability to manufacture quality, competitive exports has awoken a sleeping giant, China. Watch out for those Chinese cars, coming soon to your neighborhood. An hour after you buy one, you will feel the urge to buy another one.

Bodies

Last week I wrote about the joys of the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. I apologized for featuring something that would be over by the time you actually got around to reading about it. I still thought it fit the theme of the weekend, and could be a heads-up for planning next year. Well, I'm glad you didn't go. A wayward M&M's balloon hooked a lamppost and showered debris down, injuring two sisters. The younger 11-year-old suffered minor scrapes, and the older, 26, got this – in a wheelchair – took a shot to the back of the head, requiring 6 stitches. Wear a helmet next year.

Our bodies are precious. We don't often think about the complex mass of flesh that travels with us for the duration of this life, but it's an amazing machine. The blood and the organs and the guts and the vulnerable brain are kind of gross to consider, and frankly, a little creepy. No one likes to be reminded of mortality. However, an exhibition opened on November 19 at the new Exhibition Centre at the South Street Seaport that, while definitely unsettling, approaches the human body in a fashion unlike anything before. BODIES.....The Exhibition showcases 22 whole-body specimens and over 260 organ and partial body specimens presented in a remarkable new way. These are real human bodies. What was once only available to doctors and medical students is now out and available for anyone to view. The really amazing part is that within the 30,000-square-foot exhibition space, nothing is floating in a pool of Formaldehyde, nothing is frozen, and, thank God, nothing is decaying.

BODIES THE EXHIBITION

The human specimens in this show are preserved using a revolutionary technique called polymer preservation. Tissue is permanently preserved using liquid silicone rubber that is treated and hardened after bonding with the human sample. The final product is a rubberized body or part, preserved all the way down to the cells. This method provides an unparalleled look at the complexity of our bones, muscles, blood vessels, nerves, and organs. Aside from the protective glass housing, there is nothing between the viewer and the body on display. Preserved specimens are impervious to decomposition and can take up to a year to create. The bodies were obtained from the Dalian Medical University of Plastination Laboratories in the People's Republic of China. Asia has the largest and most competent group of anatomists in the world. Identities are withheld, but the cause of death is often an important part of the display.

Features of the exhibition give a close and personal look at the sometimes beautiful skeletal, muscular, respiratory and circulatory systems, but it also functions to show visitors the effects of unhealthy lifestyle choices much more powerfully than any textbook image can. One gallery demonstrates the perils of obesity by showing damaged organs due to overeating and lack of exercise, while another compares a healthy lung to a smoker's black lung. Seeing the real thing, staring you in the face, is an incredibly strong argument for healthy living. We also see cirrhosis, breast cancer, colon cancer, and osteoporosis. The whole thing is very strange. One body holds a baseball and is cocked back and ready to throw. Another holds a football. These were once living breathing people. They have families, and possessions, and jobs, and lives. These dead people had lives. It's hard to wrap your mind around. BODIES..... is sure to draw controversy in the coming weeks, but I really believe that this exhibition has merit. I wouldn't hesitate to bring a child. The curtain has been pulled away for the general public. We have a unique opportunity to see something we never have. It's artistic. It's scientifically incredible. It asks us to treat ourselves better. We are human beings and we all share this temple of flesh. A little insight into the one thing we will have for all our years is a welcome gift.

BODIES.....The Exhibition is open daily through the end of February at the new Exhibition Centre at South Street Seaport, 11 Fulton Street. Hours: Monday-Wednesday 10a.m.-7p.m., Thursday-Sunday 10a.m.-10p.m. Adults $24.50, Children $18.50, Seniors $20.50. Go to www.bodiestickets.com for tickets.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

LINDA ALPERN AND JUDITH LEIBER AT GUILD HALL

While Linda Alpern's photographs share commonalities with other photographers' works, she conveys her own special way of seeing the world. Yet we can't help but recall Man Ray's distortions of the human figure, recently displayed at Vered Gallery. His manipulations featured the concept of "doubling"; Ms. Alpern's pieces are similarly inspired but present variations on a theme.

Ms. Alpern extends the idea of doubling to include literal examples of twins, like "Will and Finn" and "Bully Boys." Then there's also her picture of three images, the foregrounded one showing a man smoking, the backgrounded images depicting a contorted form which resembles Siamese twins. Is this a representation of the id, ego and superego? Chuck Close's portrait also employs a background/foreground perspective for duplicating purposes. Ms. Alpern's bodies floating in water convey other kinds of distortions. The sheer variety of Ms. Alpern's subjects holds interest as well. Consider her "family" portraits of her sister, Ronnie, and her extended family which includes Ted Dragon, John Chamberlain and Ossorio Alphonso. The position of the last subject, taken in a bathtub, is not only a bit bizarre, but surrealistic, too, appropriate for the surrealist Ossorio. Ms. Alpern's photographs of "street" people are at once idiosyncratic and universal: the bleached blond in Los Angeles, the young woman in Rome, the four skateboarders posed again a wall (recalling a Larry Clark scene). There's something disturbing about Ms. Alpern's world view, which is one of her strongest assets.

Conversely, Judith Leiber's pocketbooks are pure pleasure to behold: elegant, exuberant, exalting. We have only to spend five minutes at this display before dismissing the traditional notion that functional objects can't be art.

We also have to dismiss the idea that Ms. Leiber has a "signature" purse. Or at least question it. In fact, variation is the quality that predominates. And, of course, extraordinary styling. From the 1970s to the present, Ms. Leiber's diverse materials (including alligator, velvet, leather, canvas, rhinestones, and suede) and shapes (like satchels, clutches, envelopes and balls) are mind-boggling. While Ms. Leiber's animal-shaped pocketbooks are personal favorites, her real contribution is the timelessness of her designs. Her purses will still be appreciated years from now, when most of her clients have long departed from this earth.

By the way, this critic swears she remembers a purse worn by her mother that was almost identical to one gloriously displayed at Guild Hall. We can always dream, can't we?

Ms. Alpern's and Ms. Leiber's exhibition will be on view at East Hampton's Guild Hall until Jan. 15, 2006.

HONORING THE ARTIST: DRU FREDERICK

This week's cover by Dru Frederick not only represents an icon for East End dwellers but has special significance for its artist as well: the setting, Hook Pond, is both the subject of Ms. Frederick's current series and also a familiar and favorite site from when she would spend summers here.

Or as Ms. Frederick puts it, "Hook Pond is one of the real visual splendors of this area."

Even so, the space also reinforces Ms. Frederick's view of nature, her wish to "capture the underlying essence of subjects, to go beyond the surface." We imagine that an environment like Hook Pond allows her to express her signature style, or as she describes it, "abstract representational," in an "immediate, spontaneous, direct way."

Ms. Frederick first became aware that she had a special connection to her subjects and to art in general when she was in high school. She recalls making terra cotta sculpture at the time, abstract figurative work where "magic happens." Another valuable experience in her creative process occurred when she attended Ohio Wesleyan University and learned the importance of drawing.

Taking graphic art courses at the University of Michigan also helped Ms. Frederick on her way, encouraging her to appreciate design and simplicity more. "I also got a little neater after taking graphic art courses," she says with a little laugh.

While Ms. Frederick, who moved here full-time ten years ago, finds most of her subjects on the East End, traveling to Europe has been inspiring, particularly the two summers she spent in England's Lake District as a student and, more recently, in France's Loire Valley where she paints outside (naturally). "The light is more intense there," Ms. Frederick explains. "I would take a big canvas, roll it up, and take off for the fields. The locals seem to appreciate artists painting the landscape although we didn't come upon many tourists. I also remember going out at night to paint, where there would be only white cows in the field and the moon shining on them."

For a person who enjoys visual experiences, this is an "offbeat" image Ms. Frederick is sure to recall. Her aesthetic influences have also tended to be offbeat: when asked to name some favorite artists, she quickly answered, "Alice Neel and Francis Bacon." It appears Ms. Frederick has a penchant for those things that possess exotic or unusual qualities, like organic gardens and orchids. (She grows all of the above.) Also somewhat unconventional is the business she has in fine art restoration. It's her way of preserving old and cherished objects. Come to think of it, Ms. Frederick's Hook Pond series is about restoration, too.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

Popular musical biographies are popping up on the big screen with the regularity of a bad penny since Danny Kaye played Red Nichols in The Five Pennies, a movie that had me wanting to cash in my love of films for perhaps mis-spending my youth in a pool hall. These days pop music biopics have matured nicely and I can leave the theatre humming a tune and not wanting to kick a poor defenseless creature, except of course if it's the producer/director of De-lovely.

With the lingering, commanding presence of Ray, Taylor Hackford's Ray Charles story, still warm, comes another ambitious undertaking to lay out on view "the man and his music" for us to pay tribute to Johnny Cash and, thereby, enshrine for the ages his work and talent on DVDs and videotape. I must quickly add that James Mangold's Walk The Line equally recounts the talents and strengths of June Carter, Cash's wife and partner. And as recreated by Reese Witherspoon, Miss Carter rises above the lofty heights Mr. Mangold, as writer and director, has set for the "Man In Black" Johnny Cash. This should not necessarily put down Joaquin Phoenix's performance as Cash which is perfectly admirable in every way. We might put it to the notion that we have had so many good-to-excellent portraits of pop stars, the novelty is blunted. Add to that, Cash's biographical rise from po'-Southern-boy-poverty to success, to hard times, to success, to hard times, to fame has an all too familiar twang about it. However, Phoenix generates some truly stirring moments, both musical and without the help of music or latex make-up appliances. I, for one, admire the actor's risk-taking ability. He works without Johnny Cash's actual recorded voice (this made the Ray Charles film so startlingly real). Phoenix sings the songs himself, without the barrel-chested, rain-barrel resonance that gave the real Cash Value to Cash's near-threatening tenor, or should I say baritone-to-basso voice that gave him the "bad man" identity. When his wardrobe went from white to black, only a few were surprised. He was bad in the best sense of the meaning.

Walk The Line

The "badness" was molded in bold relief on Cash's face – that imperious nose and, the harrow-carved ruts in his face. He was practically born with them. Mr. Phoenix's slick face has fortunately, plenty of black. Black hair and eyebrows and, oh! those deep deep black eyes. Somehow, otherwise, depth in Walk The Line tends to swim flashily on the surface. Finally, it floats totally at sea.

Ms. Witherspoon, on the other hand, tightly grabs a refreshing role: the strong-willed woman who doesn't just flop into the arms of the country-rock star who's crazy about her. She's a grand, Grand ol' Opry star in her own right. The gospel-inspired singing family she was part of was revered. The Carter Family's prestige didn't need a dark ominous man who needed to tread cautiously with his guitar held high. The law worried him for his being high on green speedies, etc. The movie has him on the stuff because his muse, June, keeps him at guitar distance. Witherspoon is being hyped for an Oscar and it is justified. Her performance is totally marvelous. However, sadly, though she puts a weighty amount of flesh on her role, the script leaves her wanting. In the end, she is left scrawny and Twiggy-thin. Mr. Phoenix is also left bereft, high and dry without the meaty stuff that made so many other music biographies heavyweight contenders.

Walk The Line does not follow its own admonishment. It wavers off the thin fine line between good and bad. The motion picture messes with it in a tangy, entertaining way, but side-steps the meaning. Did Cash perform so passionately at Folsom Prison because he took advantage of a captive audience, or actually because he felt he was one of them? June Carter was captivated by it. She wrote Cash's huge hit, "Ring of Fire," but the film never has her cross into the "Ring." There's the failing. When things get hot, Walk The Line avoids the hot coals that sear an audience's memory.

THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

WALL STREET

Jump into your track shoes and run, don't walk to the Ross School's auditorium on Goodfriend Drive (off Route 114) on Saturday December 5th. Be there before 2 p.m. because the "They Made the Movie Here" is Oliver Stone's award winning Wall Street. If Thanksgiving dinner has you lethargic and groaning, this film will whip you into shape. You'll get a pounding, physical going-over by the aggressive, jabbing, Oscar-winning performance of Michael Douglas as Gordon Gekko, a no-holds-barred, destructive Wall Street terminator, who will lie, cheat, search-and-destroy any company or anyone to make a million or so and preferably, a lot more. Wall Street's penetrating, eye-opening action and deep massaging of your anger is guaranteed to trim off a few of those calorie-filled furrows on your brow. Here's the drill: Call Dan's Papers for reservations and/or to get there early to be sure you get worked over by wheeler-dealer Gekko, one of the most powerful and rottenest buyers and sellers in the market. Warning: you will leave satisfied, but bruised, and it's free.

Initially, I was surprised when I first heard that Wall Street was to be Oliver Stone's follow-up film for his raw and scathing war movie, Platoon, which won so many Oscars, among them Best Picture and Best Director. I figured Ollie needed a little peace and respite from warfare. Boy, was I wrong. In Wall Street, which he co-wrote with Stanley Weiser, not only do the traders wage business war with Eastern philosophical battle tactics, but Stone's Gekko goes far beyond the Art of war, he also buys and sells high-priced art. He lives for high profit and low morals. He's a killer in business. His mottoes (the milder ones) include: "Churn 'em and burn 'em" and, "Rip their F-ing throats out," "Legal? LEGAL? HAH!" He eats raw meat (Lunch is for wimps). He chews up competition and spits 'em out onto the street. Money is power.

From Stone's daybreak opening scenes of NYC on its way to work to swinging Sinatra singing, "Fly me to the moon . . .", into the flying-numbers brokerage houses and the seemingly crazed, high-rolling action off the Stock Market . . . even out as far as the smooth, rolling wave-action of East Hampton beaches, there is tacit manipulation, clawing deception and lascivious profit hunting, and it smells.

Also on the scent of BIG money is young Bud Fox, (Charlie Sheen) who is a wannabe Gekko in this tale that attacks the "American Way." The story is a kind of one-plot-fits-all that you've seen done to many themes and subjects. To wit: Bud comes across with illegal inside info for Gekko and a box of Cuban cigars. It works, it generates bucks. Gekko sends Bud a blonde, a stretch limo, champagne, no pain cocaine, and oral sex. POW! Buddy Boy is hooked. He's an $800-suited corporate spy buying and selling out his best friends, his girl friend (Darryl Hannah), and his Dad (real life father, Martin Sheen, in very winning form). Can Bud turn against his colossal mentor and idol?

Oliver Stone dedicated this film to his father, who had been a broker. Wall Street has passion and his trading war is pictured with a good, in-step cast, including the impeccable performer, Terence Stamp, but it's the bile-like juice of chunky Mike Douglas' Gekko that makes the army march boldly.

So, park and march or jog to the Ross School's auditorium for refreshments, and, more eats and local talk by your guest host Marion Wolberg Weiss and Sarah Halsey. O.K. let's go - HUP 2-3-4, HUP 2-3-4. GASP!

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

Dave Evans' MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

Aeon Flux

The film that nearly killed Charlize Theron finally makes it to the movie theater and seems to have been well worth the risk. Backed by a surprisingly highbrow cast (Sophie Okonedo, Pete Postlethwaite and Frances McDormand are the tip of the iceberg here), Theron stars as the title character, an undercover operative, 400 years from now. Breathtaking science fiction.

Chicken Little

Disney hurls itself into the world of CGI animation whole-heartedly without Pixar to hold a hand in this fairy-tale adaptation. The casting is smart and savvy with "Scrubs" Zach Braff as Chicken Little, backed by the voices of Amy Sedaris, Patrick Stewart and Wallace Shawn, but the film feels lifeless. If Disney is to reclaim its role as King of Animation, it will need something far more original.

Derailed

Swedish director Mikael Hafstrom turns his attention to America with this tale of infidelity, violence and blackmail. Jennifer Aniston and Clive Owen star as the adulterous executives who are caught canoodling on a train by a sinister and deranged Vincent Cassel. Silly and quite graphic in its way, the "Odd Couple" casting of the leads should generate enough interest in this average thriller.

Good Night, and Good Luck

Don't hate George Clooney just because he's beautiful. Of course he was the envy of every man as the unstoppable Dr. Ross in TV's "E.R.," a reputation his film career has managed to maintain. Then there's the celebrity lifestyle, the casino he and friend Brad Pitt have apparently purchased and now this. Clooney has created, hands-down the best modern noir in years. See this, and then cry alone that you will never be him.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire

How long can this keep going on? As the young stars of the series struggle to hide their growth with longer hair and bigger capes it is hard to wonder how the same actors will be shoehorned into their gowns when J.K. Rowling's saga finally rolls to an end. Four Weddings and a Funeral director Mike Newell takes over here and it is the usual fun, backed by a phenomenal cast of British character actors.

Just Friends

Breaking away from type-casting as slaughter-fodder in The Amityville Horror, actor Ryan Reynolds dons a fat-suit for this gross-out comedy about a boy, Chris, trying to woo his friend Samantha (Anna Farris). Post-fat-suit there's a flash-forward to a newer, thinner man but here he finds himself competing with the sleazy but stunning Dusty (Chris Klein). Funny in that guilty, dirty way that involves switching off your brain.

Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang

Action-film guru Shane Black (writer of, among others, the Lethal Weapon series and the excellent The Long Kiss Goodnight) turns his hand to directing in this story of mis-matched crime-fighting partners. Robert Downey Jr. is fantastic as ever and Val Kilmer is less wooden than he has been in years. Fun, fresh, lively and well worth the price of admission.

Rent

It's been a few years since Rent was the hottest thing on Broadway but the story of twenty-something would-be bohemians growing up in the East Village is still lively and fun in all the right ways. The strong cast consists of unjustly underused movie stars such as Rosario Dawson and Taye Diggs and more established stage actors. It's hard to resist such a charming musical that arrives just in time for Christmas.

Walk the Line

This biopic of the late country legend Johnny Cash has been garnering fabulous reviews from around the world's festivals. Conventional and to the point, the power here seems to lie in Joaquin Phoenix's masterly imitation of the man himself, supported by the often under-used Reese Witherspoon. Enough to allow one to forgive director James Mangold's earlier time-traveling romantic comedy disaster, Kate and Leopold.

Yours, Mine and Ours

Filling the gap between Brady Bunch revivals, this family comedy follows the adventures of a Coast Guard Admiral (Dennis Quaid) and a handbag designer (Rene Russo) who have, between them, 18 children. The kids range from teen pin-ups to cute novelty acts, picking up the slack where the tired main stars cannot. Painless but predictable.

Zathura

Writer-director Jon Favreau is a strange fish. He wrote the script for the indie classic Swingers and also took the helm for the amazingly successful Elf. None of which seems to come close to explaining why this new film has happened. In a story all too reminiscent of Jumanji, two children stumble across a board game, which blasts their house into space. Drivel.

review: in the continuum...by gordin & christiano

At first glance the stories of Abigail, a married television reporter in Zimbabwe, South Africa, and Nia, a young 19-year-old girl/woman growing up in West Hollywood, California, would appear to have little in common, except that both are black women of African descent. With the unfolding of Danai Gurira's and Nickkole Salter's potent In the Continuum, we discover this couldn't be further from the truth. Although separated by continents, they will share several harrowing and similar experiences.

Their compelling tale begins with two women playing like children on a bare stage, and we immediately realize they are not just behaving like children, but are indeed playing children. They skip, they jump, they draw a circle, they tease, but the games quickly run amok, and the girls begin to bicker. As the quarreling intensifies and erupts one girl hurls the insulting "Your mama's got HIV." In the next moment the women are now grown teenagers dancing with joyful abandonment. They are filled with enthusiasm for life.

As a journalist Abigail struggles with her government supported television network over content, but is thrilled to learn she is expecting her second child. Meanwhile, back in West Hollywood, Nia, who struggles with her mother over her life choices, learns she has become pregnant by the talented basketball star she is infatuated with and now dreams of marrying the man heavily being recruited by the colleges. The women's excitement quickly turns sour when they both learn the men have given them HIV as well. Their families and friends respond to the news sadly in practically the same ways. How these women deal with the news and their friends responses gives In the Continuum its heart.

Both women struggle elegantly with their overwhelming circumstances and both women long to expose the men, but fear the consequences.

These are powerful journeys told in a series of interweaving and overlapping monologues, which showcase each actress' particular skills. The actresses/writers portray all the people in their respective worlds. The women are simply transformed into their multiple characters with the merest of costume adjustment by designer Sarah Hilliard..... an orange wrap, a piece of blue silk that becomes a miniskirt, a colored fabric for a headdress, and so forth.

Danai Gurira plays Abigail as well as becoming the witch doctor, a case worker, a nurse, and an old friend she encounters as she endures her diagnoses. An expressively skilled actress, she makes difficult transitions seem easy as she mutates into each character and back again.

Nickkole Salter turns Nia into a forcefully raw woman of color characterized by a spirited attitude, but marked by an underlying insecurity. She is emotionally moving, especially when her childlike enthusiasm takes off on a flight of fantasy in an attempt to deny her circumstances. She also plays Nia's cynical mother, her pre-occupied social worker, her cousin Keysha, who gives unsentimental practical advice, and her boyfriend's hardened mother.

Nickkole Salter

Director Robert O'Hara has allowed the women's story to be told with total lack of sentimentality that illuminates the drama with a comedic light touch. The characters are keenly observed and filled with a humor that is acutely authentic. We are entertained by them, laughing at them and with them, but are ultimately saddened as their plight becomes devastatingly real. The evening is an unforgettable theatrical experience that demands to be seen.

HOLIDAY GUIDE

Pucker Up: It's Mistletoe Time

That giant sucking sound? It's not the sound of jobs being lost to our friends south of the border as a result of NAFTA as Ross Perot prophesized; it is your Aunt Martha under the mistletoe accosting every cousin who walks by her. Inevitably, with the tree, wreaths, lights and stockings, comes the mistletoe and along with it, the opportunity to smooch the one you love, or get smooched by Aunt Martha – a mixed blessing by any measure. So whether it's case A, and you're laying a wet one on your woman, or case B and Aunt Martha is laying a wet one on you, you have the Druids (or the Greek gods, or the Anglo-Saxons) to thank – or blame – whichever the case may be.

Back in the day (meaning a long, long, long time ago), mistletoe was revered by the Druids. Because it grows without roots in the ground, they believed that the gods planted it. They used it as an antidote to poisons, to make sacrifices to their gods, to protect them from curses and witchcraft, cure illnesses and exorcise demons. Women wore it around their necks, hoping it would bless them with fertility. Some hung it over a crib to protect babies from being kidnapped by fairies, and others wore it around their necks because they believed it would make them invisible. The Druids valued mistletoe so much that they would trim it from trees with golden sickles and place a white cloth on the ground to prevent any of it from touching the earth. Any trimmings that touched the ground would lose their powers, so they believed.

So how does their obsession with mistletoe relate to the holiday tradition? Well, it was the sacredness of the mistletoe that made Druids drop their weapons if they saw an enemy beneath it and call a truce until morning. The Druids' use of mistletoe influenced Christians in England to ban the plant from their churches. Yet, somehow, the plant is now a tradition within the Christian holiday.

The Druid legend is not the only one from which the holiday tradition of kissing under the mistletoe may have originated. There is also the tale of the Norse god Balder and his mother Frigga, the goddess of love. When an arrow made of mistletoe killed Balder, his mother shed tears that turned into mistletoe berries as she brought him back to life. Frigga would then kiss anyone who passed under the mistletoe. From then on, it was believed that no harm would come to anyone who stood under the green plant and was kissed.

Today, there are a few variations as to how the kissing under the mistletoe tradition is practiced. Some believe that if a couple kisses under the mistletoe that it is an omen of an upcoming marriage, or a prediction of longevity and ultimate happiness. If the mistletoe was not then burned on Twelfth Night, any couples who kissed under it would not be blessed.

One custom was initiated to prevent the kissing from getting out of hand. This tradition only allows a boy to kiss a girl under the mistletoe if he picks one berry for every kiss. The kissing must then end once all of the berries are gone. This aspect of the tradition is rarely practiced today. However, you may want to keep it in mind the next time you see Aunt Martha puckering her lips.

The evolution of the tradition of the mistletoe is interesting, and so is the plant itself. The only animals that eat mistletoe berries and survive are birds. In fact, these birds carry mistletoe seeds with them as they fly from one tree to another. This is how the mistletoe spreads throughout the forest.

Many people do not know that mistletoe is a parasite. Because of the way it kills the trees that it infests. The roots penetrate the bark of the host tree, allowing the mistletoe to feed off the water and nutrients within. The longer the parasite is attached, the quicker the tree is sapped and weakened.

Although mistletoe apparently has its negative qualities, its reputation has flourished in many cultures. The plant's history is slightly ambiguous, but we still embrace it as a holiday symbol today. So, hang your mistletoe to get a kiss, bring blessings to your house, protect your children from fairy thieves and decorate the home. Just remember to take it down when Aunt Martha is on the prowl, or remove the berries.

HOLIDAY GUIDE

Eaten Out of House and Home

When we think of the holidays we cannot help but be reminded of the old fashioned taste of gingerbread. How can we help ourselves when it has such an enticing aroma and appeals to our sweet tooth?

No matter what its size or shape, gingerbread is very versatile. It can be a moist savory cake, a flat crunchy cookie, and even an extravagant candied and bejeweled house.

Eating a piece of gingerbread is like taking a bite out of our ginger roots. Gingerbread's crude beginnings (a slice of bread encompassing a piece of ginger) was eaten by early Greeks to help with indigestion.

Ginger was brought back by the Crusaders in the 11th century. Not only did the root travel well, it served as a preservative in breads and pastries.

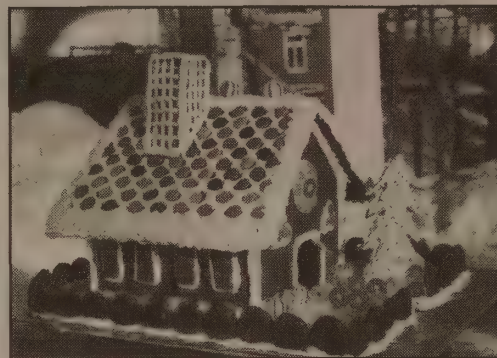

In England during Medieval times, gingerbread simply meant preserved ginger. However, the French called it gingebras, taking its root from the Latin word, Zingibar (spice).

But it was Germany who was really the forerunner of the traditional gingerbread house. Nuremberg, Germany, is known as the gingerbread capital of the world. It is here that a guild of master bakers known as Lebkuchler was established. (French bakers of pain d'épices instituted their own guild in 1571). Because of the availability of local spices used in the baking of gingerbread, which gave it such a zesty flavor, Nuremberg merchants were called Pepper Sacks. The Lebkuchler were craftsman who designed lavish gingerbread houses. The structures would have wooden molds, decorated with intricate frosting and even gold paint. Lebkuchlers created Hexenhausle (houses with little witches in front of them). They were also known as Lebkuchenhausel or Knusperhauschen (houses for nibbling at).

The Lebkuchler's gingerbread houses were so exquisite that they inspired the Grimm Brothers in the 19th century to write the popular fairy tale of Hansel and Gretel. So enchanted by the story, the German composer Englebert Humperdinck wrote his famous opera, Hansel and Gretel, which premiered on December 23, 1893. Since this beloved opera made its debut around the holiday season, gingerbread houses fast became part of a family tradition. These houses had to have a good foundation. To achieve this the dough would have to be baked so its consistency would be firm enough to support the framework. On New Year's Day children would use mallets to smash the houses apart, which they would then quickly gobble up. Eating yourself out of a gingerbread house and home represented the start of a brand new year.

In England during the Middle Ages, young ladies used to present ornamental gingerbreads to knights before a jousting match. This custom evolved into the popular gingerbread fairs. These fairs were known as "fairings." This referred to the fact that someone would receive a gift given at or brought from a fair. The gingerbreads were usually presented in different figures to signify special times of the year, for example, birds and animals in the fall. Gingerbread pigs were sold in France during festivals given by monks at their abbeys from the 11th to the 19th century. Additionally, if an unmarried woman ate gingerbread molded in the shape of a man, than her chances of obtaining a husband were increased. Hopefully the couple would soon be moving into a gingerbread house of their own.

Ginger was brought to America by the British. Gingerbread cut into the form of letters were used as a learning tool for children in the early settlement of Williamsburg, Virginia.

In 1771, Virginia voters were given ginger cookies to choose candidates for the House of Burgesses. How delicious!

And speaking of houses, Americans are very big on gingerbread homes. Houses in the United States have a sugary taste as opposed to the more customary spicy European version. This depends more on the region and what local ingredients are available. For example, New England uses maple syrup while the South uses molasses. In Pennsylvania, they lean more toward the original German classics, while the Midwest prefers Scandinavian ginger cookies known as Pepparkaker or Lebkuchen.

No matter which way you slice it, you can't beat being home for the holidays as you settle down during a long winter's night and bite into your very own yummy gingerbread house.

HOLIDAY GUIDE

How to Get a Jolly Red Nose Just Like Santa

The holidays are a time to hole yourself up in your cozy house, surrounded by loved ones, and all the necessary provisions. A staple to any holiday celebration is the right beverage, whether it be piping hot cider or tasty spiced rum. After all, the holidays are a time when all the senses are satisfied: the fluffy, soft feel of the first snowfall, the smell of pungent cinnamon, the sound of silver bells, the twinkle of Christmas lights sparkling, and the tastes of the season.

The most typical holiday beverage is eggnog. This seasonal drink can be prepared with or without alcohol. It is deep-rooted in history. It is believed that eggnog originated in England in the early 1700s. In Europe, eggnog was made with wine or port, but when it made the journey to the New World, rum replaced wine, adding a new twist. President George Washington loved to drink eggnog, and he devised his own recipe that included rye whiskey, rum and sherry. Apparently, it was a very stiff drink that only the most courageous were willing to try.

So, are you prepared to follow the path of the founding fathers? Are you brave enough to whip up a batch of frothy, festive eggnog? If so, here's a fabulous recipe to follow. This one is a bit heavy-handed on the alcohol, and if you want to reduce the rum by half, it will still make a savory treat – or eliminate the alcohol altogether. No matter how you mix it, eggnog will spice up your holiday party.

Grandma's Swingin' Eggnog

(www.webtender.com)

Ingredients:

6 egg yolks
1/2 cup white, granulated sugar
2 cups milk
2 cups light rum
2 cups whipping cream
Nutmeg

Mixing instructions:

Beat yolks until light. Add sugar and mix well. Add milk and rum. Mix well, then chill for at least 3 hours. One hour before serving, whip cream and stir into chilled mixture. Return to refrigerator for an hour. Serve in punch cups and dust with nutmeg. Serves 20.

Another traditional holiday drink whose presence has become known around the world is Gløgg. It's a Scandinavian spiced wine punch, but that's not all..... Vodka or brandy may also be added to the concoction to pack a little extra punch. Gløgg is a traditional holiday drink in Sweden and Finland. Gløgg originated as a mulled wine, which is a hot, spicy wine. Mulled wine dates back as far as 400 AD, but Gløgg came to be in the 1800s when the signature ingredients, raisins and almonds, became incorporated into the recipe. Serve gingersnaps, gingerbread, or cinnamon rolls with a warm cup of Gløgg and you'll be celebrating Advent season Scandinavian style, and they truly know how to keep warm.

Gløgg

(www.webtender.com)

Ingredients:

1/2 cup golden raisins
1/3 cup sugar
1/4 cup blanched almonds
12 cloves
6 cardamom pods, bruised
2 sticks cinnamon
2 pieces orange peel
1 1/3 cup water

3 cups dry Red wine
3 cups Tawny port
1 1/2 cup brandy

Mixing instructions:

Combine all the non-alcoholic ingredients in a heavy enamel or stainless steel saucepan. Bring to a boil, then simmer 5 minutes. Add the red wine and the port and bring to a boil again. Remove from heat and let steep, covered, for at least 2 hours. Then bring back to a simmer, add the brandy, and heat for 1 minute. If you want to be fancy, you can put it into a warmed metal bowl, turn down the lights and ignite it before serving. Serve in Irish coffee cups.

For those of you who would prefer to steer clear of the alcoholic beverages, or for the kids, there are some fabulous holiday recipes for spiced cider that get the warm blood pumping. Heating up the liquid releases the aromatic scents of the spices, and your whole house will be smelling like Christmas in no time. Here's a really simple recipe for a delectable treat to warm up with.

Hot Apple Cider

(www.christmas-corner.com)

Cider:

1 large bottle apple cider
1 large bottle ginger ale

Spices:

3 cinnamon sticks
15 whole cloves
15 whole allspice
1 oz. bag of red hots
Sprinkle of nutmeg

Directions:

1. Mix 2/3 bottle of apple cider to 1/3 bottle of ginger ale.
2. Place all spices in basket of coffee maker and fill reservoir with apple cider to make 4 cups of liquid.
3. Add this liquid to cider mixture you made in step 1. The 3 cinnamon sticks can be returned to the cider mixture but discard the remainder of the spices. Taste cider mixture for flavor. Additional red hots can be added if preferred for color and spiciness.
4. Steep cider for 45 minutes to 1 hour before serving. Can be refrigerated and reheated as needed.

Or, for the ultimate in swanky holiday celebrating, after the kids and the adults have gone to bed, and it's time for the fun-loving folk to stay up and play, mix yourself a fabulous Christmas Martini. It's got the refreshing taste of peppermint with the smooth feel of a martini. Here's how:

Christmas Martini

(www.drinks-mixer.com)

Ingredients:

3 oz gin
1/2 oz dry vermouth
1 tsp Peppermint Schnapps

Directions:

Pour the gin, dry vermouth and peppermint schnapps into a cocktail shaker half-filled with cracked ice. Shake well, and strain into a chilled cocktail glass. Garnish with a candy cane, and serve.

Happy holidays, and bottoms up!

HOLIDAY GUIDE

Spectacular Snacks for Unexpected Guests

Two of the most stressful words in the English language are "unexpected" and "company." After all, it is not as though people maintain a constant supply of fresh cheese and crackers, replaced daily, in case someone should happen by. So, what do you do when you find out that friends are coming over and you don't have time to go shopping for snacks? Here are some ideas.

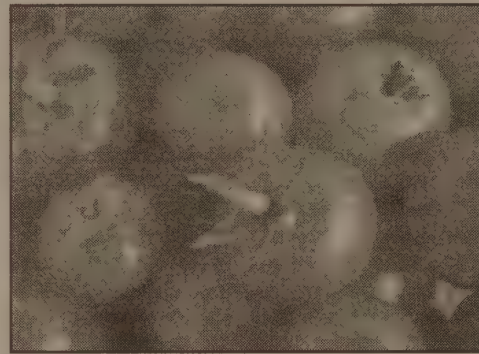

Keep cherry tomatoes in your house. Not only are they a healthful snack for you, but perfect for company. Put the tomatoes in a nice bowl, and fill a small bowl with salt. People can dip the tomatoes into the salt for a delicious, simple and unusual treat. If you want to take this to the next level, put out a third bowl with well-chilled vodka. The tomatoes are first dipped in the vodka, then the salt. By the way, this is a great hors d'oeuvre for expected company, too!

Most people have mayonnaise, soy sauce, bottled lemon juice and sugar in their house. If you buy wasabi paste (available at fine food stores), you will have all the ingredients needed for a fantastic, easy-to-make dipping sauce. Mix together 1 cup mayo with 4 teaspoons soy sauce, 1-1/2 teaspoons sugar, and 2 teaspoons each of lemon juice and wasabi paste. That's it. The dip is particularly great with asparagus, but not many people have asparagus on hand for unexpected visitors, so you can also serve the dip with your cherry tomatoes, carrots or celery – all good vegetables to keep in your refrigerator for snacks anyway.

If you want to be able to offer a tasty snack more appropriate for – let's be honest, here – guys, there are lots of options. Keep an unopened box of Chex Party Mix in your pantry. When company comes, put it in a bowl, and voilà, you have a snack. You can also keep an unopened can of mixed nuts – perfect munchies, at least for people who are not allergic. Other items that will stay fresh in your pantry for quite a while if they are not opened include quality potato chips (such as Cape Cod) and dried wasabi peas. Just check the expiration date before you serve any of these items, and remember to replace the items if they have been unused for too long.

If you want to serve something a bit more substantial, you can keep prepared, packaged foods in your freezer, and heat them up in the oven or microwave when company arrives. Many people love pigs-in-a-blanket – what a guilty pleasure! You can also buy bite-sized pizzas, egg rolls, boneless chicken wings, potato skins, breaded mushrooms, and all sorts of other goodies. And, for those guests with a sweet tooth, you can keep one of those frozen cookie dough rolls and bake up a bunch of cookies just before your guests arrive – that is, if you (unlike me) can avoid the temptation to eat the dough raw out of the freezer.

Of course, whatever snack foods you decided to keep on hand, it is also a good idea to have a selection of drinks in your house, including soda (regular and diet), sparkling water, coffee, tea and light beer. It is nice to be able to offer wine, as well. You can ask someone at your wine store to recommend a quality but inexpensive wine to serve company; there are lots of good-tasting wines that you can be proud to offer your guests, who will have no idea how little you paid.

With these snacks and drinks in your house, you will never have to worry about what to do when unexpected company arrives. But beware: once your friends learn that you reliably offer good snacks to your guests, you may find that people drop by unexpectedly so often that you will start to expect it.

Expanding Your Holiday Real Estate Portfolio

Everyone can be a real estate mogul around the holidays. Don't worry about the moratoriums, the DEC or the Town Planning Board because none of them can stop you from building the village of your dreams. The only people with any control over your development are the ones who live with you. Setting up ceramic Christmas villages has become as much a part of the holidays as stringing up lights, and although there are several companies who produce ceramic villages, it would be easy to say Department 56 is the company that shaped the industry.

Starting in 1976 with only a series of six ceramic-lighted buildings, Department 56 has grown tremendously over the past 28 years. It now boasts over 11 collections including Elf Land, The North Pole, and the Dickens' Village. Their influence on the ceramic real estate market boom of the past few years is a testament to their creativity and quality, not to mention the public's desire to build a winter wonderland of their very own.

For diehard collectors, every village has its own distinct charm and mixing is generally frowned upon. In other words, one should never combine the buildings in the City Series with the Dickens' Village Series or allow other such anomalies to occur. For the average collector who is shopping individually for houses and businesses that catch their eye, the combination of several series can create an interesting and eclectic town feeling.

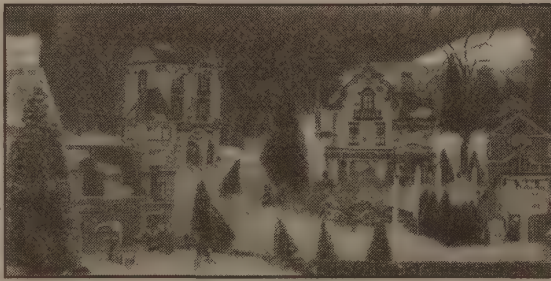

The age-old saying "Rome wasn't built in a day" also applies to Christmas villages. The creation of the perfect personal village takes years. The annual introduction of new houses and stores allows the town to grow, until you either run out of room or buy a bigger house (I'd suggest a bigger house). Normally, it is gradual expansion and, although it is possible to buy every single building in a specific village at one time, the average collector enjoys the process of collecting little by little.

To get started, all you need is a house/store and a bit of creativity. By visiting a reputable dealer like the Wharf Shop on Main Street in Sag Harbor, you can get the opportunity to examine many of the choices available. You should decide where you would like to begin. Many choose the Dickens' Village Series because of its figurines: The Ghosts of Christmas Past, Present, and Future are all accessories to this series, but in the end it is really up to you. Once you have decided on a building, whether it be a home, church, or store, find a flat area close to an electrical outlet to place it. Deep bookshelves work well with individual pieces, as do small tables, desktops, and, of course, the mantle.

Don't wait until you own a whole town block before you start thinking about landscaping. A few trees or a stonewall work well to create a feeling of authenticity, but nothing helps to add character to a village like people. And of course, what would a Christmas village be without snow? Cotton works well, but for those who would like a more intense version, there is a line of artificial snow products that gives a more genuine look.

Personally, I enjoy incorporating colored lights to add additional character to the town. By changing the light bulbs inside the buildings you can create dramatic effects. Blue works quite well for churches, while orange provides a warm glow from houses, flickering bulbs give the illusion of a roaring fire and blinking bulbs work perfectly for lighthouses, but be careful about where you add red lights, you don't want Tiny Tim walking around in the red light district – My heavens; think of his Victorian sensibilities!

Once you've started your village, with such a wide variety of accessories, people, and buildings (including lighthouses, wharfs, and alpine chalets), it will be hard to curb your desire to continue accumulating pieces until every flat surface holds a miniature church, ice skating rink, or pub. But if it seems like setting up your village for Christmas, only to dismantle and store it in your basement for the next 11 months seems like a bit too much work, you're in luck. In 1998, Department 56 created a year round village, including seasonal pieces capturing the essence of autumn. In addition, they have also recently introduced a summer resort community, making it possible for your village to thrive well after the snow has melted, giving them a chance to summer in the Hamptons just like everyone else.

HOLIDAY GUIDE

Gimme Some Sugar(cookies)

"You know Dasher and Dancer and Prancer and Vixen, Comet and Cupid and Donner and Blitzen....but do you recall the most famous Reindeer of all?" These are the words are practically heard on every easy listening radio station right now along with "White Christmas" and Adam Sandler's "Hanukkah Song." Yes, the holidays are fast approaching. How goes the shopping? Did Black Friday do you in, or are you eager for more?

As your feet pound the mall pavement and your fingers do a little dancing while shopping on-line, take a break. Breathe in, breathe out. Relax. It will soon be over! Faster than you ever anticipated. So take the time to smell the coffee and bake a few dozen delicious cookies. Invite some friends over and reminisce about holidays past and present. Better yet, do a cookie swap. Each of you makes a dozen delicious holiday cookies and swaps them. You'll end up with a cookie feast that will have Santa jumping for joy and the elves asking for more.

First things first, you need to bake your cookies. Here's a simple sugar cookie recipe to follow in a pinch.

- 1 cup shortening
- 1 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 2 3/4 cup flour
- 2 tsp. soda
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1 tsp. vanilla

Cream the first two ingredients well. Beat in eggs and vanilla; add soda and salt. Mix well. Blend in flour. Pinch out a small amount of dough and roll in sugar. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 minutes. (Courtesy of Cooking.com)

If you want to jazz up your cookies and make them festive, here are a few fun and simple suggestions. Before baking the dough, divide it into sections, use a holiday cookie cutter to cut out a shape (Santa, Rudolph, Dreidel etc.) then take a knife and cut out a few small square windows on your shape. Add a few colored lifesavers to the empty spots and bake. The cookies will come out with a sort of stained glass effect from the melted lifesavers. Another fun cookie tip; dip your sugar cookie in melted chocolate. You can purchase green, red and blue chocolate this time of year. Melt over a low flame preferably in a double boiler and dip or drizzle the chocolate onto the cookie. The cookies look festive and taste absolutely delicious.

If you are creative and want to whip up some fun and festive frostings, here's an easy frosting recipe to use: Combine a 1/2 a box Confectioner's Sugar with 1 Tablespoon egg white powder with 5 Tablespoons of water. Mix well with a low speed mixer then increase the speed as it thickens. You may have to add a little more water depending on the consistency that you desire. Subdivide frosting into different bowls and add food coloring in various shades. It's a lot of fun painting the frosting onto the cookies. Decorate the cookies with non pareils and gumdrops.

I used to admire cookies with the sort of 3-D look to them. It's easy to do; layer dough in small segments on the desired part of the cookie. Say you are looking to make Rudolph's nose bigger and shinier than ever. Make a round ball of dough, add a tint of red food coloring and press it onto the spot. Seal it with a bit of egg white for a shiny effect after it's baked. The Rudolph cookie will have a nose so bright that it will guide that sleigh tonight!

Melted marshmallow is a fun and slightly messy cooking medium to use to decorate your cookies. They sell jars of it in the baking aisle or you can do it yourself by slowly cooking marshmallows over low heat. Again, you can add food color for effect or you can simply drizzle the marshmallow onto your cookies. Sprinkle with holiday sprinkles and you have a tasty, sweet treat.

Powdered sugar looks beautiful when carefully sprinkled over cookies shaped like stars, or on Gingerbread Men decorated with frosting and gum drops. The sugar can be used to make a lacy effect when you use a paper doily as a stencil. Place the doily over the cookie and gently sprinkle the sugar. Carefully remove the doily and the cookies will have an old fashioned snowy white lace look.

There's nothing quite like baking fresh cookies during the holidays to make you feel more festive and bright and make your home smell delicious. Enjoy!

He Who Casts Last

The tiny fish moves silently through the water, propelling itself with short bursts from its agile tail. The turbid ocean currents and sweeping tides prove to be no challenge for the mobility of this elusive creature. Its olfactory senses pick up the smell of blood. In the dark water, its eyes adjust and fixate on the shiny scales of its prey. It darts toward the floating luster (attached to a transparent monofilament line) with its mouth wide open and bites down.

You stand in waders, waist deep in water and feel the tug of your line. You instinctively jerk the fishing rod towards the sky. Hooked! The fish thrashes about in all directions yet its resistance is futile. After an arduous struggle, you reel in your catch. Attached to your line is a keeper. This is a victory in an archaic activity that once aided man's survival rather than fulfilling his recreational desires. You have caught the most coveted fish inhabiting the waters off Long Island, a striped bass, a Morone saxatilis or if you're into that whole brevity thing: a striper, a linesider, a roller, a squidhound, or a greenhand.

This brief fictional fishing tale, this choose-your-own-adventure, won't mention anything about the hours of waiting (and wading!) in frigid waters, standing exposed to blasts of wind that weather your ruddy cheeks raw and cause your eyes to tear. It doesn't mention the hours spent in desperation for a bite, or the feelings of disappointment after a fishless day or night. It also doesn't mention the reason why we fish— to challenge ourselves, to get away, to relax.

Fishing is not a seasonal sport and can be done

all year round— but keep in mind there is no guarantee that you'll catch anything. The ideal season for surfcasting lasts from the beginning of spring to the end of autumn, approximately May to December, the most ample time being from August to October. But the season is only dictated by where the fish will be. On Long Island, there are three major regions where surfcasting is prevalent. These areas are the north shore, the south shore, and Montauk. Each region is unique for its geography, the type of water body it's situated on, and direction in relevance to wind, current, and tide.

The north shore is situated on the Long Island Sound, which has an abundance of bass and relatively mild wave conditions. Harbors are etched into the north shore and bestow quiet eddies where fish can meander and feed. These areas provide marshlands and calm waters that yield loads of baitfish and bass.

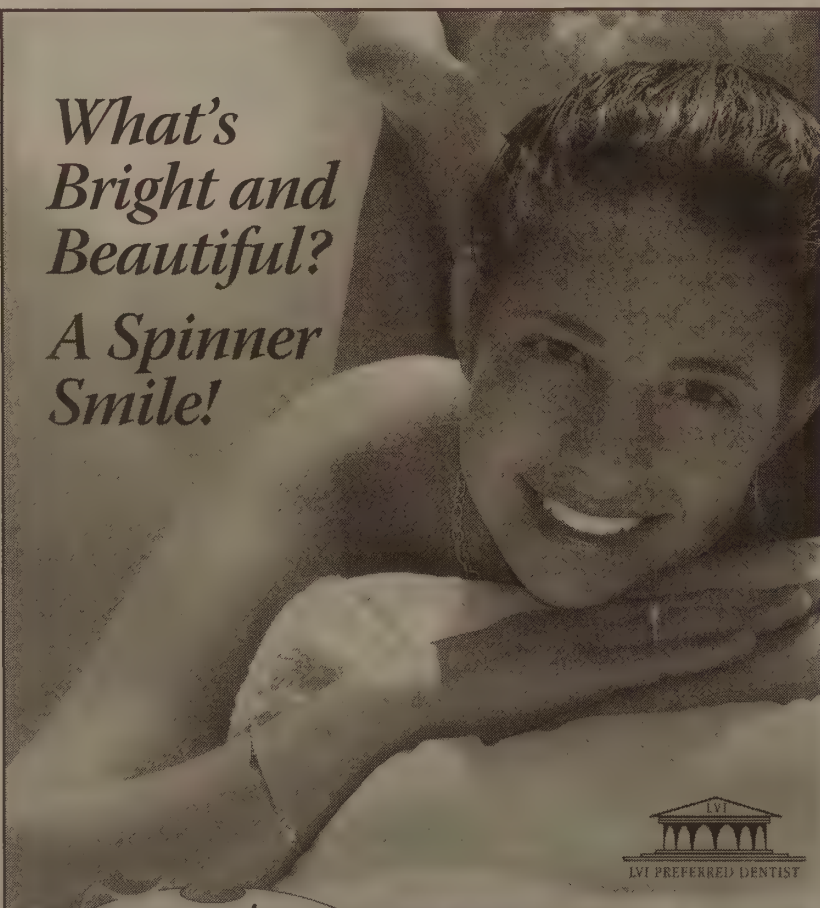

The south shore consists of the sandy, dune-laden, oceanfront beaches that span the underbelly of Long Island, which as a landmass topographically resembles an enormous fish. There are back bays with high grasses to the north of these barrier beaches, namely Shinnecock Bay.

Montauk seems to be a place that resembles Mecca in more ways than one. Not only are the waves at Ditch Plains the prime destination for Long Island surfers, the rocky shorelines of "The End" are also a surfcaster's dream. There are locations for calm-water fishing in back water places such as Napeague Bay. Spots exist in the all the nooks, crannies, and cliffs of Montauk yielding great surfcasting for any tide and any wind direction.

With these spots in mind, all you'll need to do is purchase a rod ranging from 6-8 feet in length,

Makeover Mondays

I've had a bit of a grim few months. I've been sick, I've been stressed; I've been a mess. Now, as temperatures plummet, you also feel like nothing seems right with the world? At least that's how we all feel at times, on a cold Monday morning route to, perhaps a job we don't love, or a chore we've been putting off. Right? You take a quick look at yourself in your car mirror and yuk, your skin looks sallow and pasty, it seems like every day of late has been a bad hair day. You've got roots showing, frizz flowing and the style you had during the hazy days of summer is non-existent. Even your mascara has smudged. Then you look down and see that your nails look as if they've been immersed in water for a week with chipped, or no polish at all. Or worse. Hang nail!

After a day, a week, or even a month of manic Mondays, even if it is a Tuesday, there's simply only one thing to do: Make a date for a make-over, or even a make-back to who you once were. It won't cure all the wrongs, but trust me, you'll look and feel much better when dealing with them and that can make a world of difference.

I'd had a heck of a week and so I walked into my hairdressers and said help. With a capital H. My highlights had grown out and I needed a good 3 inches off my ends. You know how that is. I settled into the chair and instantly felt myself relax. My hairdresser, whom I love and trust, was delighted to see me and the two of us eased in to a comfortable chin wagging. She offered me a beverage, and though I declined the wine, it felt good to be pampered as I sipped on my bubbling glass of water served in a wine glass. Nice. Mala, hairdresser extraordinaire, offered me a magazine as she foiled my hair, spinning gold through it like an artist. After reading silly, wonderful gossip and nonsense, I felt myself being transported to a better place. Being placed under a warm cozy lamp to "cook" helped even more. Before too long I was shampooed. The wonderful thing about my salon is that they give you a head massage when they shampoo. Bliss. By the time I'd had a trim and blow dry, I was walking on air. But that wasn't enough. I headed over to my closest department store and asked for a make-up make-over. It's an inexpensive way to have your make-up applied. I tried new lipstick tones and shadow colors and let myself just be as the artist applied the make-up with soft brushes in a sweet manner. I even treated myself to a new lipstick. When she was done, I took a look at myself in the mirror and almost didn't recognize what I saw. With gorgeous new hair and make-up that accentuated my assets, I was back to myself again. I was back home again, at least for today. But there was one last thing to do. I headed to get a mani and pedi. The girls in the salon soothed and smoothed my hands and feet. Before I knew it, I could sign a check without feeling like a schlep.

At the end of the day, I walked home with my head higher and my spirits raised. All of my worries and woes vanished for a while. It's amazing what looking good on the outside can do for the inside.

So as we approach the holidays, give yourself a gift, a make-over Monday, and see how looking good can affect how you feel.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Winter Whites

The last, clinging oak leaves have now fallen, spring bulbs have been planted, and many trees and shrubs at Rock Cottage have been pruned in anticipation of a spring that is not so very far off.

At this time of year, one of the plants that can brighten a room – and also help a gardener make it through the winter – is the paperwhite. This plant appears in nurseries at this time of year and is a welcome home addition because of its lovely white or yellow blossoms and enchanting fragrance.

Paperwhites are a type of Narcissus – a member of the Amaryllis plant family. The technical name is Narcissus tazetta papyraceous. These plants are a popular bulb for forcing. The word Narcissus comes from the Greek word “narke” which means “numbness” or “stupor,” and probably refers to the flower’s intoxicating fragrance. It may also be associated with the fact the bulbs are poisonous. Most Narcissus species are natives to southern France, Spain, and the surrounding Mediterranean. They are sensitive to frost, and only hardy to about Zone 7. They thrive in areas where the roots are consistently wet. Research shows many Narcissus species have been cultivated for hundreds, even thousands, of years.

Paperwhites are probably the easiest bulbs to force, and bloom in four weeks-to-seven weeks after they are planted. Typically, stock is readily available in October. Once purchased, store them in a cool area of the basement, and plant a few bulbs each week, sequentially over a month or so, to have flowers throughout winter. Each bulb produces several, flower-bearing stems. The flowers are strongly scented, ed, so just a few bulbs provide a succession of flowers and scent.

When purchasing bulbs, select only bulbs that are free from scars, blemishes, and bruises. This reduces the possibility of purchasing bulbs with basal rot caused by a disease named Fusarium. It infects the plates of the bulb and results in a mushy brown decay. Discard any bulbs that seem to be so tainted.

To force bulbs, fill a pot, or bulb pan with one or two inches of potting soil or stones. Position bulbs so they nearly touch each other with pointed ends up. Add enough potting soil, moss, or colored glass marbles so the top half of the bulbs remain exposed. Water well (no fertilizer is necessary).

We prefer to plant the bulbs in glass dishes with small rocks and water so we can watch the roots grow at the bottom of the dish before the bulbs flower. For success, you must be sure to keep the bulbs consistently wet throughout the duration of their bloom so the roots do not dry out.

Place pots in a bright, cool room with strong light until the shoots are one to two inches tall. Then move the pots to a warmer location. Bulbs started in a location with inadequate light, or that is too warm, tend to produce leggy leaves and blooms that have a tendency to flop over. So, it is a good idea to stake the plants as they grow larger than four or five inches tall.

Some of the most popular varieties to look for

Paperwhites in mid-growth

include: “Ziva,” a variety with trusses of beautiful, fragrant bright white flowers; “Omri,” with many white florets on multiple stems and bright white centers; “Soleil d’Or,” a bulb that is delicately scented and produces yellow blossoms; “Nony,” with white flowers and pale yellow cups; and “Grand Primo,” a late variety that produces clusters of powerfully scented, creamy-white blossoms.

Paperwhites are sensitive to Northeast frost, so many people discard the bulbs once they have bloomed. At Rock Cottage, we have had luck transplanting the bulbs once after they have been forced. If you want to transplant them, give them some fertilizer once they have bloomed and cut any seed pods away. Let the leaves yellow on their own and store until spring. Plant the bulbs after danger of frost to a depth of eight inches. In a year or so, they will produce flowers – provided they are heavily mulched in winter.

If you don’t want to go through the process of forcing bulbs yourself, many of the local flower shops and nurseries in East Hampton have well-grown paperwhites available during the Holiday season.

Paperwhites are a welcome reminder spring is not far off, even in the dankness of December. Their intoxicating scent and bright flowers fill a room with the reminder of spring. This is a highly recommended bulb for the winter season.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

It seems the value of East End estates has become nearly immeasurable. The increase to property values and what they have sold for here in the past few years has been staggering. This is because the various estate sections in each one of the Hamptons claims their own set of geographic attributes and social benefits continue to be sought after, regardless of the state of the real estate markets transitions. Where in Montauk, Eothen, former celebrity enclave to Andy Warhol & friends, better known as the Church Estate, listed at $45 million. It offers the seclusion of the Moorlands backed by hundreds of acres of preserve or one can choose the long stretch of white sand on Old Montauk Highway's gold coast that draws beachgoers from just about everywhere.

Southampton boasts what seems like endless stretches of manicured oceanfront estates and mansions on sizable parcels running along the prestigious areas of Gin & Meadow Lane. On Meadow Lane where size apparently has no limit, New York financier Jay Sugarman continues to build his 20,000 sq ft modernist home on the ocean that will house three structures including the main house, a guest house and a pool house, regardless of the controversy surrounding it.

In Bridgehampton, there is Three Ponds Farm that is valued at approximately $70 million. It has, you guessed it, has three ponds spread out among its 60 acres of rolling farmland. This compound's countless amenities make it one of the most unique properties on the East End. It has an 18 hole golf course, 14 formal gardens, a 75' flush-edge pool, a grass tennis court, pool house, guest house, fish house, pro shop, barns, and silos.

In East Hampton, Adelaide de Menil's much

talked about oceanfront estate on Further Lane is now said to be valued at and possibly sold at $105 million. The other often-spoken-about property is the 18,000 sq ft Georgica Pond beauty, on 40-plus acres, designed by Francis Fleetwood called Burnt Point that sold last year at $45 million. Burnt Point has a private dock, pool, pool house, and two barns spread over its acreage. The geographic make up of the land mass which surrounds this vast pond resembles that of a hand and five finger-like peninsulas that make for the kind of privacy sought after by a bevy of celebrities such as director Steven Spielberg, domestic diva Martha Stewart and ex-spouse of a fashion icon, Kelly Klein, just to name a very few.

Water Mill boasts the landmark Villa Maria with its 23 bedrooms, 13 baths, 5 fireplaces, a ballroom, 3 guest houses and its own chapel on 15 waterfront acres that was sold after a bidding frenzy, for $35 million just this past year.

In North Haven, another historic mansion, Maycroft that listed at $25 million and sold at $20 million is not only being renovated and restored to its original grandeur but has been rotated to obtain more appealing water views.

One of the most impressive pieces of real estate on the East End goes unrivaled is that of our Gardiner's Island, the largest privately owned island in North America, spanning more than 3000 acres that cover approximately 5 square miles. The island has been in the Gardiner family for generations dating back as far as 1639 when it was said to be obtained via a trade with the Native Americans for sundries such as gun power, blankets and a dog. The island is virtually invaluable considering not only its locale set between the two forks, but its historic significance as well. The beauty of this pristine island is that it remains much as it did hundreds of years ago. It was inherited by Alexandra Creel Goulet last year when her uncle, Robert David Lion Gardiner, the Lord of the Manor, passed way. The rumor of the island's possible development has yet to come to fruition and the fate of the East End jewel remains only speculation.

The Hamptons are home to some of the largest, most beautiful and most valuable properties in the country. The uniqueness of some of the estates here could rival that of any from Beverly Hills to Palm Beach. And despite the uncertainties that seem to be looming of late around in the real estate world, what continues to reverberate here is; if you build it, restore it or preserve it, they will come.

some 4-6 oz. sinkers, and a 20 lb. test line that will help you snatch that Guinness Book of World Record's fish; the one that is over five feet in length and weighs 100+ lbs. Don't think this is impossible, considering what the previous world record striper was once held by an East End captain named Bob Rochetta, before the title was seized by a New Jersey fisherman in 1982, the bass being 53 inches in length and weighing in at 78 lbs. and 8 oz.

The beaches we are surrounded by provide a fertile ground for the ancient art of surfcasting. The striped bass is out there waiting for you to take a gamble. Knowing where to go is only half the battle when fishing. You can perfect your casting techniques and equipment selection by consulting an expert, or a fishing guide. Drop by any local bait shop or even check out the website of New York State licensed guide Bill Wetzel at www.longislandsurffishing.com. If you're interested in literature, read the nonfiction fishing story, Night Tides, by Michael Cinquemani. These sources will motivate you to strap on some waders and cast out into the blue, all in hopes of bringing the striper trophy back to our island.

FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Dear Dan,

Your comment to my letter (your comment "Can't We All Just Get Along") is without substance. You cannot show where the Church systematically purchases property in residential areas and converts the property to a church or a religious school, as the Hasidic community is guilty of.

As I predicted in my previous letter Chabad in Southampton is now attempting to purchase the adjacent property to add to their religious program and try to comply with some of the zoning requirements.

Sal Rinaldi
Sag Harbor
Via E-mail

I believe you can operate any residential property as a church if you comply with the zoning requirements.

PAVE THE WAY

Dear Dan,

Are "they" trying to make us look like downtown Riverhead? Could this be any uglier, replete with fake red bricks? For the one or two weeks during the Hampton Classic (the only possible time of year one could even imagine the need for any assistance at the intersection of Scuttlehole Road and Mitchell Lane) a cop or two would have been a kinder, gentler way of handling the situation. This is a colossal waste of taxpayers' money, and a major inconvenience while under construction...when can we start procedures to rip it down?

Debra Simon
Via E-mail

Stand clear of the thundering hordes. —DR

NEW CONSTRUCTION?

Dear Dan,

It was with great pleasure that I read your paper at my daughter's office recently. She had lived in Sag Harbor several years ago (her name was then Shelby Clark), and is now manager of the Chester, New Jersey Weichert office. An employee who recently visited Long Island brought Dan's Papers home.

It was with considerable regret, however, that I read the article about the condominiums being built on Water Street. I have always remembered Sag Harbor as a town that had quiet surroundings, which provided an ideal setting for country living. My former boss, Ed Conti, president of an ad agency in New York and New Jersey, had a house there and involved me in many of the activities that took place during the summer.

Your paper is wonderful and is a great addition to the area. I wish you the best now and in the future.

Phyllis W. Reinauer
Bridgegewater, New Jersey

I don't know anything about this. —DR

HIFF SPEAKS

Dear Dan,

On behalf of The Hamptons International Film Festival, I would like to extend our sincere gratitude to Dan's Papers and to you personally for your generosity in supporting our 13th event.

This year's Festival, which presented the work of innovative influential filmmakers from around the globe, was a tremendous success — the most well-received and attended festival to date. There was extensive press coverage on local, national and international levels, significant industry attendance and considerable support in our new Southampton programs.

We hope that you enjoyed the Festival and will continue to be involved in our efforts to support independent filmmakers and engage audiences.

Stephanie Saylor
Festival Manager

Have Fun in Prison

Tristan Macleod goes by a variety of aliases. Simon Macleod, Stephen Cookman, and Mark Prew are all pretty average sounding names. But the thing about Tristan is that he's not afraid to transcend ethnicities. He can go by Nico Carabetta and Nico Gambino, or even his most impressive aliases, Raven Macleod and Raven Thunderhawk. Whatever identity this guy chooses to manipulate, Tristan Macleod is the animal who has been caught. Tristan Macleod is the caretaker who robbed an elderly North Haven couple of $58,000 over the course of several months. Last Thursday, NYPD officers finally brought this man to justice at a retail store in Manhattan called "Get 'Em." His plan had apparently been to milk people of funds through fraud and forgery, and then buy expensive electronic devices and sell them on the street for dirt-cheap prices. This thief had apparently been running scams all over the country, from Virginia and Washington, to Nebraska and South Dakota. Now he has a new home in Riverhead at the Suffolk County Jail. Good riddance!

Clean Getaway

A Hampton Bays man was deceptively relieved of $20 and a credit card while he was shampooing, conditioning, lathering, rinsing, and repeating on October 11. The money and personals were taken out of his wallet while he was bathing in the shower. "Rubadubdub, I got robbed in the tub!" is believed to be the comment given by the victim after the theft. Why would he say that? It's just ridiculous.

Walker Bush

Street signs, construction barrels, and two juniper bushes were all stolen from a construction site in Bridgehampton on November 14. The location of the site was on the corner of Scuttle Hole Road and Mitchell Lane. It is believed that the culprits camouflaged themselves in the juniper bushes and stole the rest of the equipment, although there were no reports or sightings of any juniper bushes running around with construction barrels and street signs. It's just a theory, for crying out loud.

* * *

Batman?

Village Police in Sag Harbor arrested a 24-year-old man at 3 a.m. on November 26. The man was apparently asked to leave by employees of the Cigar Bar. He belligerently resisted arrest and was taken down as soon as he sunk his teeth into an officer. He also punched a hole in the wall at the police station and became violent with officers there. It is reported that he was maced by officers, but I believe they must have used garlic spray. This guy was obviously a vampire, just read the signs: he was active between dusk and dawn, violent, and craved a bite of human flesh. This guy was blood-thirsty! Although there is no evidence, it is believed the nocturnal nuisance will be shipped back to Transylvania in a coffin.

Give a Little Love

A man in Amagansett called police during an argument with another man on November 15 and claimed that the dispute has been going on for 5 years. Get over it already! Have they been just standing there, face to face, bickering for the past five years? Someone should either throw a punch or apologize, because this is going nowhere.

Unwanted Company

A homeowner in East Hampton went downstairs to make some breakfast on Sunday morning and found a stranger sleeping in a downstairs bedroom. "Who is this man? I don't know him," thought the homeowner. The man decided to call police. When police arrived at the scene, the trespasser gave a viable excuse. He told the authorities that he couldn't remember how he wound up in the house, "due to his intoxication." Hey, I could buy that one. We've all been there...I think?

A strong foundation for a new building...A strong foundation for your finances...

When it's done right, not only will it last a lifetime...but through generations. Just like our relationship with Suffolk Cement. Four generations ago, Wilhelm Lohr started Suffolk Cement...and his banking relationship with SCNB. Now, four generations later, Wilhelm's family continues to carry on the tradition with the company he founded and the Bank he trusted...Suffolk County National Bank. We invite you to start a tradition with SCNB today.
